Israel Violates Faith Freedom

Notre Dame — The children of Catholic-Jewish marriages and converts from Judaism to Catholicism suffer from discrimination in Israel today, a priest who made a study of the Church in Israel charges in the Oct. 8 issue of Ave Maria, a national Catholic weekly magazine published here.

Father Philip Wagner, after a careful study of "The Position of Catholics in Israel," declares that "the Christian children of mixed marriages are subject to insults, indignities and ostracism in the Jewish communities to which their parents have brought them to live."

He adds, about converts, that "the fact remains that it requires no small heroism for a Catholic of Jewish origin to pursue a normal existence in Israel."

"In some communities economic pressure makes it practically impossible. For this reason some — God knows how many — have given up the practice of their Faith. Others — not many — continue to live as Christians in secret," Father Wagner states.

"A few, however, courageously practice their Faith in the open. They are convinced that Catholics of Jewish origin have a particular role of being witnesses of Christ in Israel. In spite of the hostility that confronts them, they are proving that one can be a Christian and a loyal citizen of his country."

Father Wagner points out the "paradox" involved here, for "as an organization, the Catholic Church is the best non-Jewish friend of the Jews in the world. No other non-Jewish organization has so defended the natural rights of the Jews and so protected the Jewish people from oppression and persecution."

He concludes: "The Israeli government is sensitive to world opinion. If, however, Israel is to command the respect and esteem of Christians, it must do more than proclaim principles of liberty and equality in official documents."
