Talk It Over

Babysitting

By ANNE CULKIN

Dear Miss Culklin:

Is it all right to have boys phone you while you're babysitting?

Dear A.C.:

It's the plural "boys" that creates the problem. There could be no objections to your receiving a phone call if the conversation was to be kept reasonably brief. However, when you are baby-sitting, you are performing a service for which you are paid, and it is difficult to see how you could adequately perform this service were you to spend most of the evening chatting with your friends. I suppose you would agree that, as a baby-sitter, you have no right to set up your social headquarters in someone else's home. Protracted telephone conversations are surely a breach of your responsibility and, moreover, a prolonged "busy signal" could be a justified annoyance to the parents who are trying to phone their own home to inquire as to the comfort and safety of their own children.

Dear Miss Culklin:

I'm in seventh grade. My mother thinks that I am too young to wear lipstick like so many girls in my class. Do you agree with her?

Dear Yvonne:

I do agree with her!

Dear Miss Culklin:

When you are visiting your girl friend's home, do you stand when her father enters the room just as you do when her mother appears?

Dear Tony:

Yes, the convention here is one of respect for older persons regardless of their sex.

Dear Miss Culklin: When you're going to a dance and the boy brings you your flowers, what can you say that will make him feel good but not embarrassed?

A.C.

Dear Ruthie:

Brevity and sincerity are the keywords here. An appropriate comment would be: "Why, Tom, they're beautiful! Thank you so very much." Enough said.

Weight Reducing Gum Favored In Verdict

A jury verdict in favor of the Thompson Medical Co., Inc., New York, and the company's Slim Mint chewing gum, a weight reducing agent, was rendered recently in U.S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

"Slim Mint chewing gum," according to S. David Abraham, company president, "contains benzocaine, a harmless anorectic agent. In combination with other proven ingredients, it dulls the taste buds and appetite by safely curbing the urge for high calorie sweets, snacks and desserts in the weight reducing programs of health conscious people. There is no reason," he added, "why men and women cannot eat nutritionally well-balanced meals and reduce at the same time."
