At Our House . . .

Lady M.D.'s

By MARY TINLEY DALY

Appointment of a woman, Dr. Janet G. Travell, as White House physician came as a surprise, but not the shock such an appointment would have caused a-half — or even a quarter — century ago. Women physicians have won their place in the American way of life.

Hailed by the President as a "medical genius," Dr. Travell has proved her competence through years of successful practice. She has displayed a flair for getting at the root of trouble, going ahead with medical know-how and feminine practicality.

"Just like Aunt Mary," was consensus at our house.

Dr. Travell does remind us of Aunt Mary — Dr. Mary Tinley, one of the early women physicians in this country, starting practice when "hen medics" were regarded with far less than approbation by both their own confreres and the public, too.

SUCH AN attitude has finally been broken. Pioneers like Dr. Mary and her kind helped to do it.

Though Aunt Mary died some years ago, she will always be to us, as to her other patients, the epitome of the perfect physician, "medical genius" if you will.

Constantly abreast with the latest advances in medicine, Dr. Mary never forgot the patient in treating the disease.

This came to mind while I was writing the column preceding this one: that now and then a slight illness may provide valuable service as respite from too-quickened pace of living. A take-it-easy, tea-and-toast interval can be preventive medicine against a more drastic onslaught.

These pauses, plus new duds, a revamped hair-do were recommended by Aunt Mary for her feminine patients. They work. Psychosomatic medicine, one might say, to combat insipid psychosomatic illness. (My closet still has dresses and suits bought by Aunt Mary, but selected by me: "The kind you can have fun in, Mary Louise!")

AUNT MARY herself, feminine to the nth, was always carefully groomed, every curly red hair in place, relaxed and gracious, in spite of a regime that would stymie the most rugged.

Also, Aunt Mary recommended occasional rest and change-of-scene.

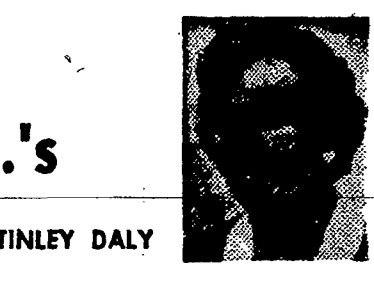

This in itself is an anachronism. For I can never remember Aunt Mary taking a vacation, as such. Now and then, to accompany a patient . . .

In addition to innate stamina, a dedication to the art of healing, there was, with Aunt Mary, the daily inspiration of Mass and Holy Communion. This was true even in the long-past days when this practice was rare. Precluding an emergency operation, or a dawn delivery, she was always present at the parish church for 6:30 a.m. Mass.

"Redheads don't get tired," was her axiom. She would laugh, in her later years when the family tried to persuade her that endless house calls could be taken on by a younger associate. "These people are used to me," was her only excuse.

ONE OF THEM became so "used to" Aunt Mary that she would call and ask in broken English, "Doc' Mary, I still got the ol' troub'! You come?"

"The ol' troub'" was loneliness, and Aunt Mary would re-

Respond with a sociable visit, plus some harmless pills. Preventive medicine.

On the other hand, another patient with a serious ailment went to the foremost clinic in the nation and had "the works." "Go back to your doctor, whoever he is," the patient was advised. "He is doing more for you than we ever dreamed could be done!"

"He" is a "she," the patient admitted.

"Well, whatever she is doing, keep on with it," the experts said. "Only wish we knew her secret."

Thus the "hen medics" of the early days, with their combination of study and feminine perspicacity — all adding up to competency — have paved the way for the respected "women physicians" of today.
