Feeble Help In Frightening Era

By FATHER PLACID JORDAN, O.S.B.

Berlin — (NC) — The Jerusalem trial of former Nazi official Adolf Eichmann for his role in the killing of millions of Jews during World War II has been the occasion of much soul-searching throughout Germany.

It has also served to remind Germans that the Christian churches were in the forefront of the few groups in the country that opposed the Nazis' effort to exterminate the Jewish people.

Among the major Christian attempts to save the Jews from persecution was the special relief organization set up by the late Bishop Konrad von Preysing of Berlin. The agency, headed by Viktor Engelhardt, included Catholic workers of Jewish descent.

It started its work on a full scale at the time when there was an imminent threat of the imprisonment of large numbers of Jews in concentration camps. It provided funds, clothing and other necessary supplies for Jews at a time when they were not free to buy them.

UNDERGROUND contacts with Nazi government officials made it possible for the Catholic agency to obtain information of impending measures against the Jews. Hans Globke, who has been accused of enforcing and even sponsoring antisemitic laws while he was an official on the interior Department, was one of the contacts who gave such warnings to the Berlin diocese. He is now a top aid of Chancellor Konrad Adenauer.

When efforts to hide individual Jews and their families or to help them escape abroad failed, members of the Bishop's agency called at their homes to give them at least some moral and spiritual comfort. Priests were notified to enable them to give the Sacraments secretly to Catholic Jews.

In one instance, a Catholic nurse of Jewish descent was permitted to take with her to the Theresienstadt extermination camp a miniature pig containing consecrated Hosts which she was able to distribute among her fellow Catholic inmates at the time of their deaths.

A woman secretary of the relief agency succeeded in hiding a Jewish friend in her apartment for over a year. Many other Jews were saved by their non-Jewish friends who hid them in their homes to the very end of the Nazi era in spite of the risk they ran.

In the course of its operations, which extended throughout the war, the relief agency obtained emigration visas for thousands of Jews when emigration was still possible.

Countries like Switzerland, Sweden and Brazil cooperated in this project.

Brazil alone made 3,000 entry permits available to Jews through the good offices of the Holy See. But the project was thwarted when the Nazis stopped all Jewish emigration. Prior to this measure, numerous Jewish children had been sent to England through the agency's contacts.

When Jews were drafted for forced labor in war industries, the relief agency often was able to provide jobs for them in plants where the owners or foremen were known to be decent people. The agency also secured positions for Jews where they could be classified as indispensable for the war effort.

Bishop von Preysing, who was later made a cardinal, personally supervised these relief measures. In addition, he refused to approve the segregation of Catholic Jews from other Catholics in public and private worship or in the dispensation of the Sacraments.

Which is doing the best work for the missionary Church — girls' boys' or co-educational high schools? This matter is treated in three articles — one on each type of school — which appear in the September issue of the SHIELD, national magazine of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade, published here.

THE ARTICLES, each dealing with what is considered to be a model high school, explain the methods used in organizing and formulating mission programs of prayer, study, and sacrifice.

Sister Martina Marie of Nazareth Academy outlines the organization at a large girls' school in her report, "When Crusaders are all girls." Confronted with the problem of an enrollment of 1,400 students, the author explains the ways in which mission programming is worked out on a small-group basis by using skits, movies, and group discussions. The moderator also notes the necessity of long-range planning so as to ensure a definite spiritual and material project for each month of the school year.

"When Crusaders are all boys," is written by Brother Fidelian of Jesus, F.S.C., former CSMC Moderator at St. John's College High School, Washington, D.C., now teaching in Pittsburgh. Brother Fidelian considers a matter which often puzzles educators: How to interest boys in religious clubs?

While this series of articles does not actually answer the question of which is doing the best work, it leaves the impression that with proper organization, each type of school can make an excellent contribution to the mission apostolate.

Cheerful Saints
By SISTER MARGARET TERESA
Nazareth College
Offbeat Spirituality by Pamela Carswell. Preface by Mr. Sheed. Sheed & Ward '61. 241 pp. $3.95.

This is a book of cheerful love as we think of it, never-dogged argument on how to theless, includes the kind of lead a good spiritual life. If human love we want—affection, you are touchy, you will be liking, "the God-knows-why-I-irritated for just as long as like you" kind, the love of you persist in reading, "the Christ . . . When you sense was the effect, at least, on the fact of that love, you're in first reader I handed it to, a the sunshine. You can relax." countrywoman of the author. Some of the examples are (Australian); she did not relish particularly amusing as well as being analyzed as an "obvious telling. Here, for example, is Catholic" or a "good Catholic the state poor Mr. P's mind is with glaring faults" or even as in about Mrs. B and poor Mr. a "rank and file" Catholic. B is horrified at himself!)

But if you aren't touchy, and if you like chasing an argument until you and fellow-hunters are completely winded, you'll like this. Sometimes the fox gets away—this author doesn't care.

Maybe you yourself take certain bits of spiritual counsel with a grain of salt—Should you? Maybe you've been given conflicting and contradictory advice—Who's right? Maybe you persist in a cheerful view of yourself; maybe you see yourself with a hopeless and gloomy eye. Is either view permissible?

The "OFFBEAT" has a calm countenance has rights of which he cannot be deprived by any earthly power. . . These are the rights to live, to be protected in his person, to liberty, to private property, to married life. . . And he may not lose them just because he is not of our race or does not speak our language. . . To deny such rights and even to apply cruel measures is an injustice against our fellow men and at the same time against our own people."

One of Bishop von Preysing's closest associates in providing relief for the Jewish people was Msgr. Lichtenberg, who eventually was thrown into a concentration camp where he died as a result of ill treatment.

Another associate was Gertrud Luckner who also was arrested and tortured in a concentration camp. She now belongs to the headquarters staff of the Central Association of German Catholic Charities in Freiburg-Breisgau. Recently she was honored by the Israeli government for saving numerous Jewish lives.

"It is true, that every living person is loved by God for himself, as he is, and that that love, infinitely surpassing human
