

Schools to be Studied

Detroit — (NC) — Catholic high school educators launched here a nationwide analysis of how their schools are reacting to the movements which have brought many traditional courses of study under fire.

How many schools, for example, would support a new movement to have professional people outside the schools correct student compositions in English courses?

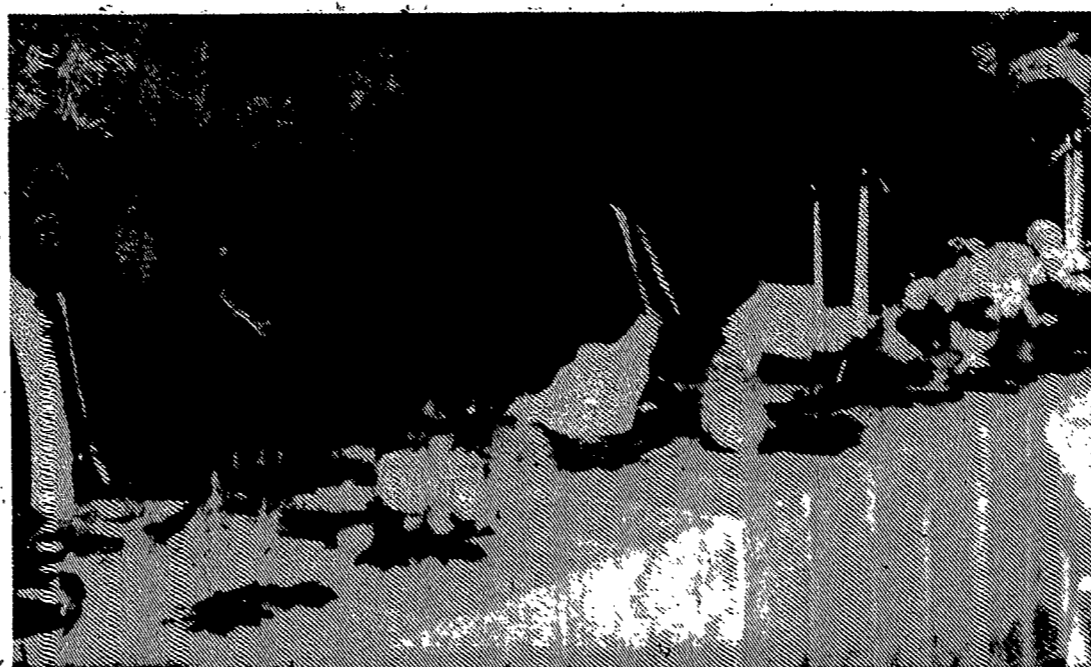

This is one aspect of the project which began at the 59th annual convention of the National Catholic Educational Association.

Other aspects are weightier. For example, the study will seek to find how schools relate to the Catholic philosophy of education. It also will ask how curricula are related to accrediting agencies.

Advisory committees, made up of Catholic teachers and administrators, have been formed to study six subject areas: English, science, foreign languages, religion, mathematics and history. If they are successful, school administration, educational television and other areas may be added to the study.

The project is being coordinated by Brother Bartholomew, C.F.X., of Newton Highlands, Mass., retiring president of the NCEA's Secondary School Department and educational supervisor for the Northern Province of the Xaverian Brothers.

"Our curriculum is being handed us from far too many sources today," the Brother said in an interview. "Many courses of study coming this way are good. But the question is, should we merely accept them? Shouldn't we analyze them? Find out the philosophy behind them and relate it to our philosophy? These are the questions we will study."

TV Aid to Convent Work

St. Louis — (RNS) — Television may well serve as a medium to introduce Catholicism to Non-Catholics, a representative of a national TV network told the 14th annual convention of the Catholic Broadcasters Association here.

Joseph Plummer, staff producer of the ABC-TV series "Directions '62" and a script editor for the National Council of Catholic Men, said Catholic programmers had a duty to show "all the many faces of Catholicism and to show them joyfully, and one at a time."

"CATHOLICISM can be shown as an historical phenomenon, as a matrix of culture from Michelangelo to Paul Claudel, as a repository whose liturgy and doctrine are unique and all-embracing," he noted.

Plummer, whose "Directions '62" series won a Gold Bell award from the CBA this year, said that in the television industry there may be limitations in the network or local stations, but there are no limitations as to the number of people reached and the subject matter.

"If we realize that our audience is as vast and as varied as it is, that it is an audience keenly aware of television as a 'vast wasteland,' then it seems at the very least unfair to keep course live chained down by what has gone over in the past, but is no longer suitable today," he remarked.

Religious programming, Plummer said, has to "shatter the tried and true formats. They don't work any more for the kind of audience that we know is out there in the shadows."

"We need something besides sermons," he explained, "something that can communicate Catholicism as forcefully, but perhaps in a different and more timely way — a way more in tune with the medium on which it is being broadcast."

Lutheran Bishop Praises Pope

Hamburg — (NC) — A leading Lutheran Bishop has praised the "open mindedness" of Pope John XXIII.

Bishop D. Lilje of Hanover, head of the United Evangelical Lutheran Church of Germany, told a group of Protestant leaders here (Oct. 18) that the "openmindedness" that Pope John has shown "never officially existed before in the history of the Church."

The Bishop pointed out that relations between the Lutheran and Catholic Churches have improved. "There is no more struggling as there was in our fathers' time," he said.

The Bishop cautioned, however, against too much optimism regarding the prospects for eventual union of the two Churches.
