Family Strength Plea

Bogota — (NC) — Latin America's bishops have issued an urgent call for a crusade to safeguard the Christian family. The archbishop declared in a joint statement that Christian family life is being undermined by poverty, lack of education, divorce and the materialistic outlook that now prevails in the region.

The bishops said: "To safeguard and strengthen the family in Latin America we urgently need an effort by all Christians to humanize the living conditions of the people and to end social injustices in housing, salaries, food, clothing and work in both the cities and rural areas."

They also warned Catholics that communism is organizing "against the dangerous attacks in order to trample on the sacred rights of parents, particularly in matters concerning freedom of education . . . and parental authority."

The statement said that family life is in peril from within — through lack of parental responsibility — and from without — by the ravages of poverty.

The counterattack, as outlined in the statement, is a widespread program of education, including better pre-marital courses, plus efforts for the re-

Pro-Red Charge Stalls Election

Santo Domingo — (NC) — A charge of pro-communism tossed by a Spanish Jesuit at a leading presidential candidate has threatened to delay this country's first free elections in 32 years.

The moderate-left Dominican Revolutionary Party withdrew (Dec. 16) from the national elections set for December 20. The party demanded that the elections be put off for a month because a Spanish Jesuit charged that the party's presidential candidate, Juan Bosch, is pro-communist.

Four Catholic bishops in a signed statement (Dec. 17) said the official position of the Church in the election is neutral but that individual priests have the right to voice their opinions.

LAST MONTH, the Dominican Bishops, in a joint statement, cited a 1949 Vatican decree which forbids Catholics to cooperate with communism.

Bosch, 53, who fought the late dictator Rafael L. Trujillo for 25 years from exile, is considered — along with Dr. Viriato Fiallo, 67, of the rightist National Civic Union — one of the leading candidates among the seven running for the presidency.

(In a five hour TV debate, Juan Bosch contended his accuser, the Spanish Jesuit, stated that he was not a communist. The priest withdrew his charge and the elections were not postponed.)

The Dominicans are scheduled to elect a president, vice-president, and a congress of 27 senators and 74 deputies to take over from a seven-man Council of State. The council was set up after Trujillo's assassination in May, 1961, to govern the country provisionally until free elections could be held.

The Council did not have any immediate word on the party's demand, but it wanted that interference in the elections by "foreign elements" would not be tolerated.

Bosch's promises of dividing government-owned properties among workers and the unemployed. He proposed to divide the government-owned sugar properties in cooperatives and to distribute all other government-owned land. He also promises fishing and livestock cooperatives and communal dining rooms for the hungry in towns with a population of over 10,000.

IN THEIR November statement, the Dominican Bishops expressed their "very serious concern" because the year of political confusion and fragmentation of parties. There are 26 political parties now active in the 18,700 square mile republic — about two thirds the size of South Carolina.

They warned Catholics that they have a grave duty to vote, and said: "There are parties of extremist ideas, both of the right and of the left, which would deny the most elementary human and Christian rights, should they win."

In a statement issued last June, the Bishops warned the people that the republic is in "very serious danger" of falling under communist rule.

Despite the fact that the communist party outlawed, it is working vigorously under the name of the Popular Dominican Movement. Its leader, Maximo Lopez Molina, was directing it from secret headquarters before she was deported during the recent Cuban missile crisis.

An article in the Vatican City newspaper written by Professor Filippo Magi, member of the Pontifical Roman Academy of Archaeology, said archaeologists had finally deciphered an ancient inscription at the base of the obelisk, dating it to the first century before Christ.

The obelisk was brought to Rome from Egypt by the Emperor Caligula, who reigned between 37 and 41 A.D., but unlike other obelisks carried to Rome it did not bear Egyptian hieroglyphics.

The prefect was Calus Cornelius Gallus, who was born in 39-28 B.C. He committed suicide in 28 B.C. after the Roman Senate ousted him and ordered this exile. Possessed of a zeal for building monuments to himself, he had become notorious for living a life of excess.

Riddle of Obelisk Answered

Vatican City — (RNS) — Oservatore Romano reported that archaeologists have finally solved the mystery of the origin of the celebrated obelisk of Heliopolis that stands in the center of St. Peter's square.
