

Blackfriar in a White Robe

CHARTER MEMBERS of Blackfriars discuss early days of the national theatre organization: Sister Helen Daulton, S.S.F., president of Nazareth College, and Miss Madeline McVannara of Corning.

"Mr. Blackfriar" himself in the person of Dominican Father Upton Nagle stopped off in Rochester last week to give a formal retreat to the young ladies at Nazareth College and to greet informally the newly established Rochester Blackfriars.

Blackfriars, a nation-wide theatre organization with chapters throughout the United States, was founded some twenty-five years ago by Father Nagle.

At that time a unit was formed in Rochester and flourished for many years. Blackfriars is now a new name for the 11-year-old Catholic Theatre of Rochester which is producing Shakespeare's "Richard II" this weekend at Aquinas Institute and Forum.

The name Blackfriars is an old one, historically and theatrically. The Dominican friars arrived in England in the thirteenth century and since they wore black robes over their white habits, acquired the name Blackfriars.

Henry VIII dispersed the religious orders in the sixteenth century and the London Dominican monastery was left empty for many years. A wandering actor found that it made a ideal theatre—it had a roof and could be heated, a trap at the time—and it soon housed the "prodution of plays—John Jonson and William Shakespeare. It became England's most famous theatre and remained so until recent times.

In the '30's Father Nagle founded the New York Blackfriars, one of the first "off Broadway" theatre groups. Through the years it has continued to attract audiences and critics and has become a showplace for many hopeful actors and playwrights.

It is the duty of Blackfriars and like organizations in the theatre, Father Nagle says, to maintain beauty in its art form and to remember that beauty requires integrity, proportion and clarity.

Textbook Survey Reveals Pupils Get Slanted View

Washington — (RNS) — A report issued here on 120 social studies textbooks used in the nation's elementary schools charged that they ignore the religious pluralism of American life, favoring Protestantism over Catholicism and Christianity over Judaism.

This claim was made in the three-year study entitled "The Treatment of Religion in Elementary School Social Studies Textbooks" by Dr. Judith J. Harris, a New York educator.

Findings of the survey, compiled for the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Jewish service organization, were disclosed here at the League's 15th annual meeting. Samuel Dalsimer of New York, chairman of the League's program committee, released the report.

According to Dr. Harris' study, many textbook authors show anti-Catholic bias. In their treatment of the Reformation, the survey stated, many Roman Catholic measures of persecution are detailed but similar steps taken by Protestants are ignored.

which the forces of good freed themselves from the forces of evil.

THE STUDY found that textbooks as a whole neglect Jewish history and "again after biblical times and do not discuss modern Jewish contributions to society. In addition, it was noted, the relationship of Jesus Christ to the Jews is often portrayed in a manner too superficial to dispel anti-Semitic attitudes.

Peace Corps Team at BC

Newton — (RNS) — Boston College, a Jesuit university here, has been assigned to conduct a 10-week U.S. Peace Corps Training Program for 50 volunteers who will serve in a Community Development Program at Lima, Peru.

The development program for Peru is related to the field of community organization which has been an area of concentration at the school of social work. The Peruvian Peace Corps project is operated in cooperation with the Instituto de la Vivienda, an agency for urban housing.

German's Stern Smut Invasion

Rome — (RNS) — Roman Catholic and Protestant authorites in West Germany have called on the federal government for increased efforts to halt the spread of obscene literature because of its "devastating effect" upon young people.

They referred to statistics issued recently by the Federal Literature Investigation Board which disclosed that 164 foreign publishing houses or export firms are still channeling 250 magazines periodicals into the country.

The report said that most of the publications come from the United States, followed by Sweden, England and France. The U.S. products were described as particularly objectionable because of an "ugly mixture of sex and sadism."

Catholic Blood For Moslems

Algeria — (RNS) — Archbishop Lamine El-Belem, Dicastre of Algiers, took the lead in a "show of brotherhood" by responding to an appeal to Christians for blood donations during the Moslem month of fasting.
