Nile Dam Threatens Ancient Manuscripts

New York—(Reuter)—Archaeologists from around the world are making "desperate efforts" to salvage as many ancient manuscripts and artifacts from a section along the Nile River which eventually will be inundated by rising waters of the new High Dam at Aswan, Egypt, a biblical scholar said here.

Dr. Bruce M. Metzger, professor of New Testament language and literature at Princeton (N.J.) Theological Seminary, said the imminent destruction of ancient writings and homes of pharaohs in the Nile area was the reason for the Society of Biblical Literature's [illegible] Princeton, former [illegible] and Jewish [illegible] [illegible] seminary professors, took part in the three-day meeting of New York's Union Theological Seminary.

Dr. Metzger presented a paper describing the only known manuscript remains of the Old Nubian version of the Bible—16 parchment leaves of a lectionary for Christmastide containing about 75 verses of text from the Gospels of Matthew and John and several of St. Paul's Epistles.

He said the manuscripts, now in the State Library of Berlin, date from about the 10th or 11th century and is thought to have come from the area now being covered by the Aswan Dam waters.
