Coloza, Bolivia—(NC)—When the "luchusa" goes to night prayers at the Virgin of Coloza parish here, it means trouble, says Father Edward Sullivan, M.M., the pastor.

The "luchusa" is particularly ugly owl, flies back and forth through the church during prayers almost every night.

When the "luchusa" looks at you through its all-seeing eyes, it is supposed to mean "bad luck." And since the choir loft is up near the ceiling, where the "luchusa" floats back and forth, the choir girls get very upset, and this causes difficulties.

THERE IS MUCH speculation among the townspeople as to why the "luchusa" is so faithful to night prayers, but Father Sullivan thinks he has the answer. The church is the only place in town which is lit up at night.

The Virgin of Coloza is a national shrine in Bolivia. On the feast of the Immaculate Conception, Dec. 8, people from all over Bolivia and other countries as well, come to pray at the shrine. Father Sullivan reports that many "miraculous" cures have been reported as a result of these pilgrimages.

One of the stories told about the shrine is that two men from Coloza were visiting in Montero and came home late at night. Because it was so late, they went to sleep under a tree. During the night they woke up and saw the statue of Our Lady in the trunk of the tree. Then it disappeared, but when they woke again, it was back in the tree trunk.

There is much speculation among the townspeople as to why the "luchusa" is so faithful to night prayers, but Father Sullivan thinks he has the answer. The church is the only place in town which is lit up at night.
