Editor's Advice
Wade into Mainstream
Washington—(RNS)—A prominent Catholic editor admonished the new generation of Catholics to wade further out into the mainstream of American domestic policies if they expect to make a lasting impression on the American way of life.
Michael Novak, editor of The Current, national Catholic quarterly, called for more Catholic leadership in such areas as the civil rights movement, minimum wage laws, the war on poverty and attempts to cope with the population explosion.
Addressing a regional convocation of the National Federation of Catholic College Students here, he urged Catholics to be infused with the same dynamic which, he said, is evident in much of Protestantism — near-militaristic attack on some of the social and economic ills of the nation.
"Catholics have been mesmerized by a concept of church uniformity," he said. "What they need to do here in America, he stated, is to adapt to the social problems facing them and taking positive action, not only as Catholics, but as interested Americans."
"We have been deceived by our love of catechism answers," he said. "We have been given the arguments in favor of a Catholic education, but we have very little said about the dangers of Catholic education."
Novak, a teaching fellow at Harvard University, also is author of "A New Generation," a book which exhorts Catholics to awaken to the social revolution that is going on about them. He maintains that the Catholics of this generation are themselves a dynamic that should pave the way for a creativity within the American way of life.
He said that Catholics in the past have been too far removed from the main pattern of the American way of life.
"We have been programmed, just like an IBM machine, into giving all the right answers," he continued. "For this reason it is difficult for Catholics to be honest, even on moral issues. Catholic education is a danger, because it gives the answers before the individual has questioned."

Both teams will be out to match or better last year's performances, which saw the Knights' track and field men capture 4 of 6 dual meets and the Elmira Relays, and the baseball squad score an unprecedented 9 straight wins in the course of an unusual 9-8 season.
In track, new coaches Bob Bradley and Dennis Murphy will be working with close to 100 runners, jumpers, and weightmen, seeking to fill the

$23 Million For Missions
Vatican City—(NC)—Catholics of the world contributed more than $23 million to the Church's central missionary agency in 1962, according to the Holy See's latest statistics. This came to about $500,000 more than the previous year's contributions.
Out of the $23 million, the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith was able to give over $8 million directly to missionaries throughout the world to help them in their work. The missionaries had requested subsidies amounting to more than $21 million, at almost three times what the congregation was able to supply.
The congregation also gives substantial support to the Pontifical Society of St. Peter the Apostle (for native clergy), the Pontifical Association of the Holy Childhood (for care for sick and orphan children, and various activities of Eastern Catholic churches in the Church in Latin America.)
