

U.S. Dioceses Adopt Missions

New York — (NC) — In Latin America, thousands of Indians lined the road to greet their "bishop" last September as he rode by seated on an episcopal throne. The man on the throne was Cardinal Joseph Ritter of Louisiana.

Cardinal Ritter is in the United States on a mission to promote "Missions of Bridgeport" in the United States. The bishop's mission is to bring the essential doctrine of the Church to the United States.

Cardinal Ritter, who is under-estimated in our diocese, we are tremendously better off than many areas that we must serve with sacrifice to ourselves.

Diocesan missions previously had been started in Ireland, Spain and France. But these, the magazine says, do not seem to have had a direct effect on the U.S. version. Since 1960, when Cardinal Ritter "adopted" the U.S. mission, the American missionary effort in Latin America has been booming. In many cases, lay teachers, engineers and medical specialists have been working with diocesan priests to establish "complete" missions, it says.

It's Cool at St. Lucy's

Parishioners of St. Lucy's Church on Troup Street, Rochester, know the altar rail in cool comfort. The church and parish hall have been air-conditioned. Father Ignatius St. George and parish trustee Nicholas Applegate are in background.

U.S. Protestants Told Support Catholic Schools

New York — (RNS) — Roman Catholic schools are "in some sense a public venture in education" and should be supported by Protestants, a Christian education specialist said here.

Dr. Robert Lynn, associate professor of Christian education at New York's Union Theological Seminary, suggested to the first National Study Conference on Weekday Religious Education that local Protestant churches could lend their Sunday school classrooms to overcrowded Catholic schools.

"If the Sunday school hour is not the most wasted time of the week," he said, "then at least the Sunday school building is doubling the most wasted building space in America."

Dr. Lynn told participants in the conference, sponsored by the NCC's Department of Church and Public School Relations, that Protestants must explore a variety of ways to support "public ventures in education."

These could include, he said, tutoring and remedial reading programs, academic tutoring in camps for children in rural and slum schools, pupil exchanges between suburban and inner-city schools, guidance counseling services and weekday religious classes designed to supplement the public school curriculum.

Roman Catholic critics of parochial schools often have maintained that the subject of religion is less effectively taught than other courses. Dr. Lynn said, "We may have something to share with the Catholics here," he added, "because we have some of the same difficulties. I would like to see local groups of Roman Catholic and Protestant educators conversing about how they teach religion."

Patience Advised

Montreal — (RNS) — Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger, in a reference to the growing discussion of birth control within the Roman Catholic Church, said here that Catholics should be "patient" and show "confidence" in the Church.

Cardinal Leger said the birth control issue was "a question for the whole Church to decide. It is not a matter which can be judged by even the hierarchy of one country and certainly not by an individual bishop and much less by an individual priest."

Visitor From Rome

Monsignor Paul Ciccolo, twenty-five years pastor of St. Anthony's Church, Rochester, who returned to his native Italy nine years ago, was back in Rochester for a visit this week. He voiced his "warm approval" of the parish construction program on Lorimer Street where a new school has been built and a new church is currently underway. In Rome, Monsignor Ciccolo supervises 14 communities of nuns and serves as an adviser to Vatican officials.

Bishop Backs Fair Housing

Oakland, Calif. — (NC) — The California State initiative which would nullify and prohibit any type of fair housing legislative action is contrary to universal Catholic teaching, Bishop Floyd L. Begin of Oakland said.

In a short pastoral letter addressed to the clergy, religious and faithful of the diocese, the bishop stated that "the initiative measure proposed as Proposition 14 next fall is of such a nature as to contradict what is clear and universal Catholic teaching on the rights and duties of those who own property."

"Proposition 14 is a moral issue," he said, "in so far as it concedes absolute rights to property owners with no reference to the rights of others. In the interest of justice and charity it should be defeated."

Bishop Begin also commented on the present Rumford Fair Housing Law which should automatically become void if Proposition 14 passes. "We are sure that a careful reading of the present housing law indicates its fairness," he said, "and its intent to relieve some inequitable burden from many of our fellow citizens."

Praising the passage in Congress of the civil rights bill, Bishop Begin said that "in this era of significant progress in the areas of social justice and we trust, social charity, we would not have our own people wanting in their responsibilities."

Methodists Spurn POAU

Washington — (NC) — Methodist endorsement of Protestant and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State (POAU) is not "appropriate for the present situation" of interfaith relations, a Methodist official said here.

Alfred Dudley Ward, general secretary of the Methodist Board of Christian Social Concerns gave this explanation when queried about the action of the recent Methodist General Conference in Pittsburgh in voting not to renew endorsement of POAU. The conference had originally endorsed the organization in 1960.
