'No Fixed Points'

Court OK's 'Beatnik' View

Denver — (RNS) — Cardinal Spellman said law enforcement agencies, seeking to act against the spread of pornography, have been frustrated by court decisions rendered by a few misguided high ranking judicial officials.

"It seems that in this age of frantic drives by every wind of doctrine and theory, lacking all standards by which to judge and evaluate what is happening," he continued, "There seems to be no fixed point."

"Some misguided individuals keep changing them and calling this progress. Once you say that men have no other standards than those taken from the quicksand in which they are dwelling, it becomes impossible to induce them to build their houses on solid foundations."

Cardinal Spellman said that in upholding publication of "The Tropic of Cancer," five judges "struck down the rulings of courts in several states including Illinois,

Florida and New York, all of which declared the book to be vile and obscene.

"Their judgment of morality has been imposed on the people of the United States. Such a shocking decision indicates a great indifference to the principles of decency and morality—the strong right arm of the framework of the Constitution of our United States."

He termed "incredible" the New York Court of Appeals decision declaring the novel "Fanny Hill" not obscene by a 4-3 vote.

"Like the three dissenting judges," Cardinal Spellman said, "we cannot accept these court decisions quietly and without reservation, if this nation is to survive. These decisions impose upon us the responsibility for immediate, continuous action."
