Why are there over 100 conversions a year per priest in many mission lands, when in the United States priests average only a little over two conversions a year? Because we are busier and must teach in Schools? But the priests in the Missions have more work. In some parishes in Africa, the priests hear confessions five hours a day, four days a week, in addition to caring for many missions and converts. The reason is probably this: here, we want people to come to us; in the Missions, they go out after the people.

We are canonicals, that is, our responsibility is measured by those who are subject to Canon Law; Missions are pastoral, in the sense that "others who are not of the fold
