 Jefferson, Wis.—(RMA)—State Rep. Sylvester is in charge of some 300,000 energetic bees which produce honey for St. Coletta's School for the mentally retarded at Jefferson, Wis. The bees colonies are part of the school's farm where most of the food for its pupils is raised. Also on the farm are cattle, poultry, vegetables and other commodities. The nun learned bee-keeping on a farm in Chilton, Wis., where she grew up. She has been working with bees all of her 45 years as a nun at both Jefferson and Milwaukee. When working with the bees she wears a special protective veil with a mesh front, but no gloves. "I've been stung so many times, I think I'm almost immune by now," she observes.

Father Owen J. Pollard, O.F.M. Conv., professor at Our Lady of Mercy Seminary, Collins, Ohio, discussing international cooperation, said Americans have much to gain by learning of the solid family traditions of the Chinese people, by inquiring into the artistic and scientific advances of the Russians, by asking the Cubans to help us understand the Latin American mentality.

"World fear is based on a lack of trust between nations," Father Pollard said. "This fear can and should be replaced by a trust that can only be built up by more communication, even with our political or ideological enemies," he asserted.

Father Matthew Herron, T.O. A., professor at St. Francis College, Loretto, Pa., said all problems arising from automation will not be solved in this century, but speculated a shorter work week would aid both labor and industry, plus maintaining consumer buying power. He said labor unions should encourage members to purchase stock in companies which employ them as a means of stimulating greater interest in their jobs.
