

At Our House

To School, With Safety

By MARY TINLEY DALY

A swarming populace emerges each morning during these mid-September days, particularly between the hours of eight and nine o'clock, a populace eager to be on its way.

Car pool drivers, tensely sitting at the wheel, perhaps irritated at a late member, jump a yellow-turning-red light; car pool mothers, concerned over the pre-schooler in the back seat who may be "coming down with something," doggedly drive ahead to discharge their passengers.

Those 43 million youngsters of our nation are a precious cargo to be delivered to schools each morning, to be returned to their homes each afternoon, amidst the growing hordes of traffic.

According to the National Safety Council, "Most of the youngsters have been told how to get to school safely. But kids—being kids—don't always remember the right way to do things."

"Younger children especially," the Council continues, "lack experience which tells them automatically what to do in an unexpected situation."

NSC recommends that drivers be prepared for anything when passing a school yard—child dashing into the street, probably after a ball; that they give an even greater margin of safety on rainy or slick streets and keep their cars in tip-top mechanical condition.

Along this line, we should like to take up the subject of bicycle riders, those Americans who first feel the zest of "wheels" under them."

Hardly a day goes by without the newspaper reporting "Cyclist Accident Fatal," "Boy Injured on Bike," "Girl Cyclist Hurt."

Anybody who drives, and that means practically everyone, knows the panic caused by a cyclist weaving in and out ahead of your car, or beside it. Which way is he headed? You refer to the left, the right, he heads the same way, or evades in your mind's eye, reenactment of tragedy.

Bicycles, those joys of childhood, those joys of healthful way to travel, need certain guidelines if they are to be used with safety. Parents must be sure that their children are able to handle their bikes with skill and that they know and observe bicycle regulations before allowing them to ride bikes to school.

STUDIES by the NSF show that it is better for a bicycle to keep to the right side of the road, rather than on the left facing traffic. Soft or rough shoulders, curbs and guard rails make it impossible for a cyclist facing traffic to yield the right of way to every approaching vehicle.

The cyclist should use hand and arm signals to warn others of any intention to stop or turn.

He should never attempt to squeeze in between two lanes of traffic, whether the cars are in motion or not.

Riding more than two abreast should never be done.

Bicycles should be walked across busy streets, in crosswalks or at intersections.

If it is used at night, the proper headlight and rear bicycle should be equipped with reflector.

At school, as at home, the bicycle should be kept upright in a rack or with a kickstand in a designated place, so that no one will trip over it.

Let's all enjoy these autumn days!

Dear Loretta Young

Slow Down

By MISS LORETTA YOUNG

Dear Loretta: I've liked a boy in the class ahead of me for one whole year and he hardly knows I'm alive. Lately he has been talking to me and saying hello without saying one word. When this happens, I'm on top of the world.

Here is my question. What can I do to make him notice me more? Should I drop a hint for him to call me or would it be proper to have my friends help me throw a little Sidewalk type party where I could invite him? Is this right, even though he has never asked me out?

A. Schmitt: Dear Schmitt: Seems to me you're doing all right without any traps or tricks. Allow the young man to be the aggressor. It's more becoming to him than it is to you. Sincerely, Loretta

The Magic Key: Dear Loretta: How does a person know who they really are? I mean how does a person know just what they want out of life, if they haven't lived it to find out? How does a person know just what they want out of life, if they haven't lived it to find out?

Spelling Trouble: Dear Loretta: For the past 45 years, I've not been able to spell words correctly. I like to write and would be interested in putting some true stories in print, but the words give me trouble. How could I at this stage in my life learn to spell?

Hope For The Best: Dear Hope: Your problem is not so bad. If you can't afford a secretary, why not join an adult night class at any of the public schools and learn to spell yourself. This would be quicker and cheaper. Sincerely, Loretta
