Buying Power To Fight Bias

Chicago — (NC) — The National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice has launched a program aimed at mobilizing the purchasing power of Catholic agencies and institutions to end employment discrimination against Negro and other minorities.

The conference said some 20 bishops have already indicated or announced their intention of adopting a fair employment purchasing program in their dioceses. A spokesman said the NCCIJ hopes eventually to be servicing such programs in 40 dioceses in large metropolitan areas.

Thomas H. Gibbons, Jr., formerly a sales and management executive, has been named to direct the conference's activities in this field in the newly created post of director of employment services.

The conference said the equal employment opportunity program would use "techniques developed in the contract compliance program of the President's Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity."

Raymond M. Hilliard, conference chairman and director of the Cook County, Ill., department of public aid, urged "affirmative use of church resources — purchases and building — to win merit employment policies from those businesses and unions providing goods and services to the Catholic community."

A conference spokesman said the program was being launched on a two-year pilot basis. The conference's contribution, he said, will focus mainly on enforcement aspects.

The 1964 chapter of the Aquinas Forensic society will begin Friday, Sept. 25, when exhibition debates will take place at Monrovia High School in Monrovia, N.J. On Sept. 26 the Aquinas group will host the Washington — (NC) — Organized labor today is "on the spot" as far as the race issue is concerned, Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference's Social Action Department, said here.

Many labor leaders, Msgr. Higgins said, "have yet to grasp the depth and the passion of the present racial crisis. As a result there is, unfortunately, a growing rift between organized labor and the Negro community."

The NCWC official spoke at the annual Labor Day Mass of the Washington archdiocese. Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington presided at the celebration in the Shrine of the Sacred Heart.

While calling the race issue "the most serious problem" facing organized labor today, Msgr. Higgins at the same time defended labor against the charges of many critics.

In particular he replied to the charge of a sense of complacency and a lack of missionary zeal on the part of labor's top management which he said had been leveled by some members of the "liberal establishment."

"Perhaps there is something to be said for this point of view," he said, "but some of its critics are really baiting the labor movement instead of criticizing it constructively. And some of them... are not keeping up with their homework and in fact don't even seem to be reading the big print in labor's current policy statements."

Msgr. Higgins said much of the criticism that labor has lost the slip it had in the 30's and 40's is "rather sentimental in nature."

Even "the most romantic and nostalgic of the old times," he said, "valuing that 'union can't live indefinitely in an atmosphere of crisis and struggle. They also know that sooner or later a union has to put aside the easy-going carelessness of adolescence and get down to the serious business for which it was established."

As for the charge that U.S. organized labor lacks a "consistent philosophy," Msgr. Higgins replied:

"Its activities compare favorably with those carried on by the labor movements of other countries or in other periods in its own history, and the demands for wage guarantees and union pressure for a variety of fringe benefits in American industry show more novelty and imagination than the plans and programs of labor organizations anywhere else in the world."

Stage Fright Seen in New Liturgy

San Antonio — (NC) — Archbishop Robert E. Lucy said here today that he has seen stage fright in the new liturgy. But the Holy Spirit will help them overcome it.

The archbishop of San Antonio, in a letter to priests and lay of the archdiocese, said that in working out increased participation in the liturgy each pastor will need well-trained laymen.

"A parish will need lecturers, commentators, cantors and leaders of community singing," he wrote.

"Let us face it: the liturgy have been kneeling and sitting in our churches for centuries; now we ask them to stand up and sing or read a Scripture lesson."

Chicago Adds Negro Teachers

Chicago — (NC) — The superintendent of Chicago's Catholic schools said the system will employ more Negro teachers in the coming school year in an integrated basis.

Msgr. William E. McManus, archdiocesan schools superintendent, said particular efforts were made during the summer to locate qualified Negro teachers. He said some of the system's schools will be integrated for the first time, but he did not name the schools or the number of them.

Some of the new Negro teachers will be employed in schools which have all white student bodies, the priest said.

The new effort stemmed from a directive issued last April by Albert Cardinal Meyer of Chicago, who told pastors to make a "zealous effort" to have both white and Negro teachers in the parish schools. The Cardinal said: "A racially integrated faculty will teach our children better lessons on the virtues of racial justice and love."
