

At Our House

Little Lady In Sneakers

By MARY TINLEY DALY

Scene was Eileen and Tony's house: situation, hectic; reason, count-down toward moving day...

Personnel—all of us who could spare some time to help with the four small Brennans...

"Too bad little Mary wasn't able to start school with her friends," sighed Tis, folding Mary's would-be school clothes...

"She'll wear them after we move," Eileen said from atop a step ladder as she took curtains from their rods...

"Put 'em across a chair," suggested her sister Pat, "and after we get the clothes hung, we'll see how much room is left."

From my own limited duty of wrapping dishes, came still another decision for Eileen to make...

Heavens, no, Mom. Good dishes won't get to wrap'em for a month. Rest go into this box, marked "Immediate dishes."

Kids still O.K. in the backyard" called Eileen. "Somebody check! Maybe they'd like to come in for milk and cookies?"

"Where's Mary?" I asked with sudden grandmotherly panic "Where did she go?"

"That's alright, Gramma," from 5-year-old Tony. "Mary climbed over the fence and went to school."

"TO SCHOOL? Unregistered and unenrolled? And where was the school? (Time was then mid-afternoon)...

We arrived at school just as classes were being dismissed. Out came the first grade boys and girls in their still-new school duds...

"I went to school, and all by myself," she announced. "All the other kids my age go."

"But didn't the teacher wonder why you weren't registered by your mother?" I asked.

"That's all right, Gramma," Mary reassured us. "I asked somebody and they told me where the first grade was, and where I lived. It was easy."

The little young lady in sneakers is on her way.
