At Our House

Come Hallowe'en

By MARY TIMLEY DAILY

Witches and goblins, ghosts and goblins, and all the other pseudo spine-tingling paraphernalia of Hallowe'en are about to descend, at your houses and at ours.

From teenagers who want to have a party — and nothing could be easier than a party on such a night — to little bits wanting their share of the fun, everybody wants to be in "The Hallowe'en Parade."

We've yet to meet the child who doesn't like to "dress up" and sometimes the ones who are seemingly most shy in the occasion move to the boldest types. They can express themselves by being Mickey Mouse or one of the Beatles or whatever.

THE DELIGHT of presenting themselves at a door for the annual "Trick or Treat" and making you to "Gues who I am!" is a never-failing challenge.

Providing those dress-ups is a never-failing challenge for mothers, as well, but one that need not cause consternation. Encouraging a child's imagination in figuring out what he wants to be for the night is part of the fun. Though steering that imagination along some what practical lines is also part of Mom's job. For instance, making an "automobile" out of a little boy would be a pretty taxing assignment.

If you have an old trunk of duds from Flapper Days of the '20s you have it made. There is truly something for everybody in such a treasure trove: monkey fur, dangling beads, chandelier earrings, plumes, feathers. Few houses nowadays, however, have space to store such full luggage, so it's up to Mom to do more modern improvisation.

A few suggestions that have worked at our house might be in order here:

One of the favorites for a little girl who likes to look pretty, not funny, would be to go as "Night" — any old long black dress, studded with silver stars, such as teacher sticks on school papers, and in her hair a crescent moon, cardboard covered with aluminum foil and secured by a headband.

Clown costumes, we have found, are perennially successful. Though they require sewing for their original appearance, they last for years, are suitable for both boys and girls and allow for wearing a sweater or even a coat underneath. The peaked cap can be bought at the five-and-ten or made from a piece of cardboard and painted.

A "nun" is an easy one: white dress and shoes, an apron, painted red cross on an apron and a cap stamped of paper and stapled together.

A "nun" can be assembled even more quickly: black skirt of Mom's coming floor-length or daughter's black stockings in lieu of sleeves, towel for a headpiece and a white cord around the waist.

Another quickie and one that seems almost too trip to mention is the "ghoul" but, like meat and potatoes, it is never-fading source of fun and each succeeding year the sheet and pillowcase "ghoul" has as
