

Skating Trial Continues Traditions of Saint

When the finest amateur ice skaters from the United States and Canada participate this weekend in the 1965 North American Figure Skating Championships in Rochester, they will be carrying on the brave traditions of a Dutch girl who is ice skating's patron saint.

Her name was Lidwina. She was born in 1380. When she was 16, she fell on the ice of a canal while skating with friends. The accident left her an invalid for life.

Lidwina however was regarded by associates as a brave person, one who was undaunted by personal misfortune and had an unusual ability to inspire confidence in others. Several miracles were connected with her life, and in 1616 she was beatified.

The Catholic Church canonized Lidwina and declared her a saint in 1890. In 1944 she was officially listed as the patron saint of ice skaters. Today, Churches in some areas where skating enjoys a particularly heavy popularity celebrate special-Lidwina Masses on her feast day, April 24.

Over the centuries, ice skating progressed from a means of travel, to a form of recreation, to a skill, to a competitive sport. Figure skating is all of these combined with an art form. An American ballet master, Jackson Haines, in the 1890's combined ice skating with dancing — the combination the world calls figure skating today.

The North American Figure Skating Championship Tournaments, held every two years, call upon the finest amateur skaters of Canada and the U.S. to exhibit remarkable degrees of skill, grace, body control, and coolness of nerve.

From 1948 through 1960 the U.S. dominated the sport on the international scene with such skaters competing this weekend in Rochester are seeking to put their team on the comeback trail.

While the 1965 Tournament in Rochester is five centuries and half-a-world away from the ice skating era that Lidwina knew, today's competitors may well be calling on their patron saint for a bit of inspiration as they execute some particularly difficult maneuvers.

The tournament is not a commercial show, but a serious competition for one of man's most beautiful and most difficult sports. The tournament will be sponsored by the Genesee Figure Skating Club and the Rochester Jaycees.
