Brave Priest Tries Book on Maternity!

The modern priest has to be all things to all men. Two knowledgeable priests have just come out with a new book:

"Maternity" (A Baby is Born)

Author is Pierre Dufoyer, but this is a pen-name for a Jesuit marriage-counselor in Brussels, Belgium. His real name is Father Rene Boiget, and he has authored a number of books on marriage and family life.

AMERICAN translator is a local priest, Father David Murphy, professor of classical languages at St. Andrew's Seminary.

The book treats motherhood from its biological, psychological, spiritual and social aspects. Part of a family-life series, it is published by Alba House, a Catholic publisher operated by the St. Paul Society.

At Our House®

Oysters 'R' In

By MARY TINLEY DALY

Poor Richard, quoting John Gay (1716) spoke truly when he said:

"That man had sure a palate cover'd o'er

With brass or steel, that on the rocky shore

First broke the oozy oyster's pearly coat,

And rigidly the living morsel down his throat."

At our house, the "oozy oyster" and as many of its companions as we can round up get a warm, almost uproarious welcome.

At least once during Lent while the months with the "r" in them are still with us, we hint — just hint, mind you — that a family oyster roast is being contemplated.

That's all it takes to set the ball rolling.

"We're free next Friday," Mary telephones, "or almost any Friday."

"We have a baby sitter lined up for Friday," calls Pat. "O, maybe the Friday after!"

"I'll be down by the wharf on Friday afternoon," Johnny tells us in his practical way. "Suppose I pick up a bushel of oysters and we'll get the thing rolling."

Settled.

A BUSHEL of oysters, a keg of beer, sliced tomatoes, crackers and cheese and we're in business.

Dress for dinner? Of course we do—in the rough and ready manner appropriate to the occasion: sneakers, slacks, sport shirts.

Arena for the feast? The kitchen, where else? We cover the breakfast alcove table thickly with newspapers, set out the sliced tomatoes, the crackers and cheese — that's for the "formal" part of the meal, for the oysters after they've been roasted.

We set the oven to 350 degrees, load the oven trays with as many of the "succulent bivalves" as they will hold, then gather 'round for the first course, the "raw bar" at the kitchen sink during the half-hour or so it takes to roast the main course.

Question of whether they're better raw or roasted has never been unanimously settled at our house. You pay your money and you take your choice.

The Head of the House, an old Chesapeake Bay man, reared on oysters since boyhood, is presiding prelate of the raw bar. Armed with sharp oyster knife, he opens bivalves quickly and adeptly, instructing neophytes in the art of cutting the muscle, saving the good juice to drink, and "Watch out, don't cut your fingers with the knife or the oyster shells."

Newest convert to the art at our house was Brad, bridegroom of a few weeks, attending his first "rough and ready" and getting quite a few finger nicks along the way. So, a box of band-aids was added to the paraphernalia over the sink.

PRETTY SOON, the aroma from the oven, of those fat juicy oysters popped open in all their delicious flavor sends us from the raw bar to the newspaper covered table. Unceremoniously, Tim, the hot oyster hand, dumps the dozens of roasted oysters into the middle of the table and we all dig it. Some like 'em in a plain vinegar-salt-pepper dip, others take to a stronger ketchup-horseradish accompaniment.

At any rate, oysters raw, oysters roasted, plus the salad and as final fillup, crackers and a couple of kinds of cheese, plus the finest component of all — good companionship — adds up to a real Lenten treat.

By tradition at our house, the "Oyster Poem" by the Head of the House is always recited by its author, part of it going like this:

"Oysters in May are passe, In June, July, August, they say, Here's what was told me today

In a highly respected cafe: 'A man who'd eat oysters oysters out of season, embroder, 25c.

Must be a chap who's lost his reason"
