

Couples Exchange Wedding Vows

With Pix

By MARY TINLEY DALY

The Head of the House recalls a plane trip when an incoming passenger asked, before taking the seat beside him, "I beg your pardon sir, but do you happen to be a grandfather?"

Surprised, the Head of the House owned up to it. "But I don't carry pictures," he added, noting the stranger's bulging briefcase.

"O.K.," the stranger took his seat and spread out his papers. "Been stuck with too many grandfathers."

Trip proceeded in mutually satisfied silence.

Whether a grandmother could exercise such restraint is a moot question, at least not any of the grandmothers I know.

Matter of fact, I thoroughly enjoy seeing pictures of other people's grandchildren, a pleasure second only to displaying my own gallery of art.

So, when a friend, an acquaintance or even a fellow traveler brings out her fat red wallet, (and isn't it nearly always red?) we have a high old time comparing the various family groupings.

"These four belong to my oldest daughter. That little fellow, the one in the red shirt, why his teacher says he is the brightest child she has ever taught."

THEN WE SEE the family of "my son George," hear all about little Emily and how well she plays the piano, have a peek at a lineup in Fort Worth, "taken outside the new home they've just built," and we're launched!

Yes, we admit, we "just happen" to have a few pictures and out comes our own fat wallet, brown, yes, brown, though its predecessor had been red.

We'd been of the red-wallet school of thought — easier to find when you open your purse, until recently . . .

"Bet it was red," said the policeman when we reported the loss. "A clever thief can spot and lift a red wallet and be off before you know it."

Ever have this happen to you? It's a common occurrence in offices, stores, libraries, even in church.

And to replace the contents of any wallet — ugh! Loss of the money is bad enough — no bad — but when you try mentally to reconstruct exactly what was contained therein, you're in for a frustrating experience. There are credit cards for department stores and gasoline; bank, club, hospitalization and "I am a Catholic" identification cards; Social Security and library cards; driver's license; a special prayer safety deposit key — and the pictures of the grandchildren.

Furthermore, you can't even stop to have a good cry when you discover the loss. There isn't time.

FIRST YOU HAVE to hop onto the telephone, notify credit departments of stores where you have accounts, the bank, the Department of Vehicles and Traffic, Social Security — and the parents of your grandchildren.

The you have to start writing — endless letters corroborating your panic-stricken telephone calls, and endure a hiatus of charge communication. You wonder, during this hiatus, if you've spread the net completely, is somebody posing as you buying perhaps a milk stool? Telephoning to Hong Kong! Driving to San Francisco on your gasoline? Showing pictures of your grandchildren and passing them off as her own?

Meanwhile, you're promising St. Anthony all sorts of goodies for his poor, hoping against hope that you're in the Good Times who will just take the money and mail back the wallet or hide it in the bushes at your house — anything!

It can happen, but doesn't very often.

Then, the "real you" has to stand up and be identified all over again; start reconstruction.

To begin with, you have to get a new wallet, and some new money. Day by day, the mail brings duplicates — with adjusted numbers — of the cards. The wallet starts extending its girth. This one, you vow, will not become as fat as its predecessor. For instance, a deposit key and a Social Security card, can find safer haven than in a portable and liftable wallet.

No, it will contain just the necessities: money and the cards you actually use constantly — and pictures of the grandchildren.

Silver lining? The pictures are up-to-date!

Survey Shows Bias on Jobs

New York — (NC) — Unless American management takes active steps to end religious discrimination in hiring, a present national shortage of executive talent will persist.

That was the finding of a five-year study by the Harvard Business School of the recruitment practices of major American corporations among college graduates. The study, second of a series sponsored by the American Jewish Committee, was financed by a special grant from the Maurice and Laura Falk Foundation of Pittsburgh.

Among 924 recruiters covered in the study, 10 percent were Protestant, 42 percent Catholic, and 48 percent Jewish. The remaining 18 percent were from companies that hired students from more than one ethnic background.
