'The Third'

By MARY TINLEY DALY

Recent column about the Third Commandment, "Remember to Keep Holy the Sabbath Day," has evoked quite a response, pro and con, as of A.D. 1965.

From William D. Armbrust, Virginia Beach, Va. comes a thought-provoking letter:

"This is not meant as a criticism of your article, but only as a means of expressing by views of 'keeping the Sabbath holy.'"

"It all depends on what is considered servile work. Any action that evokes perspiration is servile work; and if so, I have been breaking the Third Commandment every Sunday since Thanksgiving last year.

"THE MILITARY-BASE where I am stationed does not have a permanent chapel, so the base movie theater doubles as the chapel on Sundays. Hauling out and setting up the altar and altar rail, plus the lectern, microphone and liturgical magazine rack, leaves us all with liberal amounts of perspiration—not to mention disassembling all of this immediately after 10 o'clock Mass so that the Protestants can use the theater for 11 o'clock services.

"To me, all of this paraphernalia is more taxing and frustrating than idling around the yard, pulling a few weeds and soaking up some of the glorious sun.

"After a week of having my nose stuck in school books, I enjoy performing manual tasks. Whether this means painting or digging a ditch, it really does not matter, as long as it gives my mind a rest and allows me to use the other faculties which came with my brain.

"My father works at a job that keeps him until the late hours of the day and almost all day Saturday. The only time that he, and many others like him, have for cutting grass and cleaning windows is the afternoon of the Sabbath. But it does not matter if you have to cut the grass or wash the windows on Sunday. What matters is the spirit in which these things are done. Each stroke of the paint brush could be offered as a small prayer for the underprivileged of the world as a penance for your own laziness during the rest of the week.

"Different people relax in different ways; what is one man's relaxation might very easily be the next man's servile work.

"Take, for instance, the family that relaxes at a concert: the musicians in the orchestra and the doorman at the entrance are performing their normal work-week servile tasks and yet the audience is taking the opportunity of the Sabbath to relax and enjoy the concert.

"And, who knows, maybe some of the orchestra members, or the doorman, will decide to relax at a show after the concert. More people are working there at the theater to provide entertainment for others—thus a seemingly endless chain of relaxation and servile work.

"THIS LETTER may seem to be a criticism of your article, but I assure you it is not. It is only a difference of opinion, and thank God for that—it keeps the world turning."

Comes a thank-you for listening—as though I thank you were necessary for this fresh air . . . and the final:

"Now, if you will excuse me, I have to finish my laundry and ironing that I did not have time to finish yesterday."

(Written on a Sunday between duties of shifting scenes for Mass and Protestant services and the laundry duties . . .)

"Other letters, about 'This Third Commandment' column were numerous; some stricter than ours, others more lax—and all with reasons therefor.

What is Sunday—the Sabbath—at Your House?

Some people actually go into a bank to get a boat loan

Silly trip.
We bring the bank to the buyer with a Lincoln Rochester Boat Loan. You get it right at the dealer.

In fact, we've got the loan-for-boat business down to a science.

For one thing, we figured out the fact that people like to have accessories included in the loan like cushions and water skis and life jackets and even the first tank of gas.

For another, we figured that people like the loan protected so we offer a wonderful low-cost health and accident insurance called Blanket Protection.

Then of course we assumed that people want low bank rates and as long as 3 years to pay back the loan.

All that figuring paid off. We've launched more admirals than any other bank in the Rochester fleet.

Ask your dealer about us. We'd be delighted to pipe you aboard.
