Church Mergers A Welcome Sign

Father Bernard Leeming, S.J., a unity leader and professor of dogmatic and ecumenical theology at Heythrop College, Oxford University, disagreed with those who say church mergers "are made on the basis of compromise or on emptying out some essential Christian conviction."

He also declared that "Roman Catholics ought not to regard the problem of reunion as if it consisted solely in uniting others with Catholics."

Sacraments are receiving growing attention in the ecumenical movement, he pointed out.

In a discussion of baptism, Father Leeming said there remains a split between those favoring "sponsored baptism," in which an adult sponsor voices the baptismal vows of an infant, and those upholding "believers' baptism", in which a person is baptized only after he understands and believes the tenets of his faith.

"The stand of Baptists on this issue is forcing us all to investigate more deeply the meaning of baptism," he said. "In some proposals for reunion, Baptists are ready to allow sponsored baptism and believers' baptism to persist in a united church."

Father Leeming told the Catholic audience that the question of whether ministers should be ordained only by bishops causes "worry among our separated brethren with which we ought wholly to sympathize."

He said many "free churchmen"—Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Disciples — are not averse to accepting bishops but cannot accept "the slightest implied slur on the adequacy of their present ordination."

Father Leeming pointed out that ceremonies of "reconciliation of the ministry" have been devised to solve this difficulty. "Some judge such ceremonies unduly ambiguous," he commented. "Others judge this ambiguity a far less evil than the persistence of existing disunity. I may say that I incline to sympathize with this latter opinion." He called for a theological exchange of ideas.

"Pope Paul declared we must engage in dialogue — that is, an exchange of ideas between Catholics and our brethren who are not of the Roman Communion, and finally with atheists and Communists," Father Leeming observed. "Such dialogue does not imply surrender of principle. It does mean a new willingness to learn from others, even atheists. It means a new humility."

Nun Exhibits Art Work

Omaha — (RNS) — Mother Jeanne Moynihan, a teacher at Duchesne Academy in Omaha, displays three of ten works she is exhibiting at Duchesne College. Some of her paintings depict today's social and racial problems and bear such titiles as "Selma, U.S.A.," "To Mend a Broken Wing," and "Windows Cost Extra, Mister." The works — in pencil, pen and ink, casein and oil — were completed in a month of sustained work.

Merimacs' Picnic

The Merimacs will hold a picnic at Ontario Beach Park on Aug. 19th (Thursday). Dinner will be served at 5:30 p.m. Those who wish hot coffee should bring a thermos. Bring your own silver.
