Los Angeles
Parish in the Riot Area

By AL ANTCAK
Los Angeles — (NC) — You drive through the scarred heart of Watts with a man who knows something of its soul.
Father Valerian O'Leary, O.F.M.Cap., is the Catholic pastor in Watts.
He is a Capuchin and for 40 years the Capuchins have been in charge of St. Lawrence of Brindisi church.
THE CHURCH is one block from the gutted 103rd St. business section that helicopter pilots dubbed "charcoal alley" during the Negro rioting.
There is a normal weekday morning calm in Watts as you drive with Father O'Leary. Children play in front yards. Some boys stand on street corners.
Father O'Leary guides you through the east side of his parish, down Grape St., past Jordan Downs—the big public housing project, on through streets of single family frame houses, some well cared for, others faded.
As you drive, Father O'Leary points out homes of his parishioners, many of them names of families, speaks of their children, of the good parish leader who lives in that house, of the
