St. Nicholas parish, serving Catholics of the Melkite and Maronite Rites, is forming a unit of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, it was announced last week.

Father Albert Schnacky, Diocesan director of the C.C.D., made an official visit to discuss formation of the unit with prospective members. He showed two informative movies as part of a 10-week organizational program being undertaken by the parish unit.

The organizational program was started eight weeks ago by Father Raymond Shashaty, pastor of St. Nicholas. It will conclude on Sunday, Oct. 3 when special devotions for the success of the program will be held in the church at 3:30 p.m.

A "C.C.D. Open House" will follow the church services. Father Leonard Kelly, founder of Fairport's well-known School of Religion will lead discussion and answer questions on the C.C.D. program. New catechetical materials and facilities will be displayed and explained.

St. Nicholas, located at Leo and Remington Streets, was founded almost 40 years ago by Middle Eastern Catholics of Melkite and Maronite background. Like Latin-rite Catholics, these Catholics are subject to the Pope as the Vicar of Christ, and share the same faith. Coming from Eastern Europe, these Catholics are called Eastern Rite Catholics. Their customs are more ancient and more elaborate than those of the Latin or Roman Rite.

Stressing that St. Nicholas' catechetical program has the same basic aim as any other parish—to teach Christian Doctrine, Father Shashaty adds: "It aims also to preserve and perpetuate the heritage and traditions of the Melkite and Maronite Rites."

He stated that Eastern Rite Christians not only have a right to perpetuate their "brand" of Christianity, but an obligation to acquaint others with it.

"The various rites give us different insights into the personality of Christ, and the interpretation with which Christianity has been received by a given people," he explained.

Father Schnacky's assistance shows the wholehearted support of Bishop Kearney for the determination of the Eastern Rite parish to preserve its traditions going back to apostolic times, the pastor observed.

"Their C.C.D. parish center will have an ecumenical significance, because it represents two equally ancient Christian cultures, which grew side by side, have weathered centuries of persecution and political strife and yet are little known by most Latin-rite Catholics.

Father Shashaty sees this as the great missionary task of the new C.C.D. unit in his parish—"to make Christ known and loved through the beautiful and diverse cultures of his parishioners."

Today, the funeral profession deals with a sophisticated and well-educated public. For this reason its own educational standards are constantly being raised. Licensing laws have become more stringent and professional associations have been instrumental in raising ethical standards. The modern director is well-equipped to take his place among his peers of the other professions.
