The Church in Rochester's Inner City

What's the Catholic Church doing in Rochester's inner city?

Actually it's been there long before the area was even called "the inner city" with all the overtones those words today imply.

As special needs became evident in recent years, a new program was designed and is now in operation.

Under Monsignor William M. Roche, superintendent of schools for the Diocese, a special program began this past September, headed by Sister M. Cyril, S.S.J., who was appointed supervisor of the five "core" and six "fringe" schools of Rochester's inner-city, and of comparable schools in Geneva and Elmira.

This program involves special teacher training and special curriculum development based on the specific needs of the children in these areas. In addition, there are two "home visitors" who help to make contacts between the parents of these children and their teachers and pastors.

Each school, besides the general needs springing from poverty, racial discrimination, and often a background of illiteracy and distrust of authority, has its own specific problems which it strives to meet in various ways.

Immaculate Conception and Mt. Carmel schools both have kindergartens—particularly important for children from these areas; also ungraded classes to help each pupil work at his own pace, and a home-visitor. A nun manages a "clothes room" in addition to other contacts with the parents.

St. Bridget's School has a full-time social worker from the Catholic Family Center. St. Lucy's School has sent its few pupils from grades 5 through 8 to nearby Immaculate Conception School and SS. Peter and Paul's School to concentrate its facilities and personnel on grades kindergarten through 4.

The faculty at St. Theresa School possess a great advantage in coping with one of the problems plaguing many of these schools—the foreign language barrier. All of the Sisters at St. Theresa's understand and speak Polish, the tongue spoken almost exclusively by one-third of their students Many of the teachers in the schools where Spanish or Italian is the second or only language of many of the children and parents do not have this advantage.

In-service training is constant among the faculties of the inner-city. This includes lectures, films, classes, meetings, discussions, and consultations.

Since the dioceum inner-city program is not connected with ABC (local unit of the War against Poverty) or any other government agency, it has no source of income at its disposal. Much of its effectiveness comes from the volunteer help of the nuns from the various particlpating communities who give time after their regular day's work to do home visiting: teachremedial reading, singing, and art; and proctor evening study halls; seminarians and Nazareth College students who teach catechetics; lay women who act as drivers, collect clothing, and are now taking instructions at the Rundel Library to be able to work in the forthcoming bookmobile.

This bookmobile, as well as other equipment and the services of specialists in speech, reading, art, etc., should be available this month to all inner-city children under Title I of the elementary and secondary education law of 1965. The coordinator of these facilities for the diocesan program is Mr. William Paradise who works out of the Catholic School's Office.

Some of the plans for the future of the diocesan program, according to Sister Cyril, include hot-lunches; preschool classes; more home-vasitors and supervising principals; more teachers; and further curriculum revisions.
