Ecumenism In Brooklyn

Brooklyn—(RNS)—An Ecumenical Office is being opened in the Chancery office of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn on March 14 as part of a diocesan-wide effort to spell out the meaning of the Second Vatican Council's Decree on Ecumenism to priests and laymen in local parishes.

Announcement of the office was made at two meetings of some 900 priests who attended two Clerical Conferences on Ecumenism at Nazareth high school, in Kings County, and Christ the King high school, in Queens County, to study how ecumenism can be implemented by some 1.5 million Catholics in 225 parishes.

At both meetings, Bishop Bryan J. McEntegart, head of the large Eastern see, outlined the significance of the ecumenical movement and urged priests and laymen to proceed "in an ordered, well-regulated and open fashion" toward cooperation and dialogue with religious people of other faiths.

Clergy at the meetings also studied a set of tentative "guidelines" for ecumenical activity drawn up by a new Diocesan Ecumenical Commission of which Msgr. Charles E. Diviney, Vicar General, is chairman.

The priests' meeting was a forerunner of two upcoming gatherings of the laity — comprising ten-member Ecumenical Committees from each parish—who will meet March 22 at Bishop Ford high school in Kings County and March 24 at Bishop Reilly high school in Queens County to map ecumenical plans.

Many parishes are expected to launch in-depth study programs of ecumenism, using as a textbook the "Living Room Dialogues" paperback co-sponsored by the National Council of Churches and the National Confraternity of Christian Doctrine.

The Rev. William B. Greenspun, Paulist Father and co-editor of the 256-page volume, will be among panelists at the March 22 laymen's session.

The priests' study days featured talks on the history of ecumenism and the 1964 decree by Father Walter M Abbott, S.J., director of the John LaFarge Institute, New York, and Father Donald R. Campion, secretary for research and interreligious affairs of the New York Province of the Society of Jesus.

Lust For Power

By FATHER LEO J. TRESE

There is in all of us, to some degree, a hunger for power. Psychologists classify this as one of human natures' basic drives.

We like to be in the driver's seat. We like to be able to tell others what to do. Unless we are aware of this tendency and unless we discipline it, we easily can become a domineering or a stubborn or a scheming sort of person.

If we are to live and work together in a peaceable and orderly manner, it is evident that there must be persons in authority. In our political and economic life, as well as in our religious life, there must be someone in charge, someone to establish objectives and to assign tasks.

Whether or not a person in authority becomes autocratic will depend upon his understanding of his relationship to other human beings.

God has not put you and me in contact with other people so that we may reap personal profit or satisfaction from that contact. God has brought us into relationship with others so that we may save others, serve others.

The person in authority who sees himself as the servant, not the master of others, is the executive who tempers his authority with patience, compassion, and a willingness to admit that some times he may be wrong. He is not seeking his own aggrandizment, but only the greatest good of those under his direction.

On the other hand, the person who loves authority for authority's sake, almost invariably is a "bossy" type of person. He expects everyone to jump when he speaks and becomes incensed if anyone dares to question his commands.

There is an old saying to the effect that "he commands best, who first has learned to obey." A despot usually is a person whom himself rebelled against authority when he was in a lowlier position. Or, to put it positively, an obedient child makes the best kind of parent.

There are few of us so low on the totem pole that we do not exercise some authority over some person or persons. Bishops and priests, parents, officials of all kinds, employers, supervisors and foremen—these are some of the more obvious wielders of authority. Such persons have to be especially careful not to let themselves become intoxicated by the heady fumes of power, to the point where they fail to respect the human dignity of their subordinates.

But we do not have to be in a recognized position of authority to be exposed to the temptation to play God.

Authority is a necessary ingredient of good order and effective action in human affairs. But it is a dangerous tool, and those who handle it need to be alert to the danger. It was Lord Acton who said, "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Perhaps this is why the devil, in his temptation of Christ, presented as his last temptation the allurement of unlimited power.

"Again, the devil took Him to a very high mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. And he said to Him, 'All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.'

But Jesus was having none of that. He would rule over men, true enough, but only through service; through the absolute self-emptying gift of Himself to men.

For most of us the lust for power is not by any means our greatest spiritual problem. Still, it will not be a waste of time for us to examine our conscience, at least occasionally, as to the selflessness and the humility with which we exercise such authority as we have.

So do little shots.

We can mix with the best of them. But the real test of whiskey is to drink it neat. No ice. No water. No soda. No nothing. Whiskey should be easy to take. Gentle. Agreeable. Pleasant to taste. If it isn't, it isn't great whiskey. If it isn't, it isn't Carstairs.
