Nazareth College Students Awarded Lehman Grants

Three Nazareth College seniors and a member of the class of 1954 have been awarded New York State Herbert H. Lehman Fellowships. Rosemarie Abendroth, New York City, and Mary Ellen Foody, Elmira, were among 250 winners of Regents College Teaching Fellowships for Beginning Graduate Study. Maria Schnabl, New Hartford, N.Y., was one of 87 students awarded a part-time Doctoral Fellowship in Science; and alumna Virginia Weis was awarded a Fellowship for Advanced Study at Cornell University.

The Lehman Fellowship awards amount to $5,000 a year if the recipient is matriculated for a doctoral degree and has completed at least one year of graduate study; $4,000 a year to other recipients.

The study must be at an approved college or university in New York State in a program leading to a graduate degree in the social sciences or public or international affairs. The award may be used for a maximum of four years' study.

Under the terms of the Regents College Teaching Fellowship programs, recipients will receive an award ranging from $500 to $2,500 based upon financial need. The winners of the teaching fellowships may pursue doctoral study in a university anywhere in the United States with a special and approved program for the preparation of college teachers and must indicate their intent to teach in an institution of higher education within the state. The beginning award is a two-year grant; the advanced award one year, with a maximum of four years of Regents Scholarship support.

Pfc. Robert J. VanReypen Military Funeral Held

Solemn Funeral Military Mass was offered for PFC Robert J. VanReypen, a young Marine who gave his life in Viet Nam, in St. Monica's Church, Rochester, Monday, April 11.

Pfc. VanReypen died of gunshot wounds in the chest while fighting at Phu Bai, north of Da Nang, in South Viet Nam, Sunday, March 27, 1966. He had been operating a 3.5-inch rocket launcher since last September.

The Solemn Requiem Mass was celebrated by Father Thomas C. Kane assisted by Father Gerald E. Dunn, deacon and Father William C. Sisson. Also in attendance was Monsignor Gerald C. Lambert.

An honor guard from the inspector and instructor staff of the Marine Corps Reserve escorted the casket.

Father Kane, pastor of Sacred Heart of Jesus Church, Perkinsvill returned to celebrate the Mass for the young Marine. He taught the young man when a student at West High School and came to St. Monica's for religious instructions.

Pfc. VanReypen was strongly convinved of the United States' position in Viet Nam and had written his parents:

"If the demonstrators could see how the South Vietnamese were terrorized by the Viet Cong and how relaxed they felt when the Marines moved in and offered them protection, they would realize it was worth all the effort."

Surviving are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Huxley; his brother, Robert Huxley; his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Julius DePascale; great grandmother, Mrs. Joseph Danno; several aunts, uncles, great aunts, great uncles and cousins.

Burial was in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery. Arrangements by Alvah Halloran and Son, Chili Ave.

Cenacle Card Party To Benefit Sisters

Annual card party sponsored by the Cenacle Retreat League for the benefit of the Religious of the Congregation of Our Lady of the Retreat in the Cenacle will be held Monday, April 25.

Proceeds will be used to reduce the building debt incurred in the construction of the new wing completed in 1960.

When Mrs. Libanus Todd bequeathed the original East Ave. home to the diocese of Rochester in 1947, Bishop Kearney presented it to the Community of the Cenacle in order to establish a Retreat House for women in Rochester.

A building fund campaign was initiated to construct an addition to the original house and an enlarged chapel. The commemoration of the opening of the new wing took place on June 24, 1960, when the Bishop blessed the chapel.

The larger quarters enabled the Sisters to increase the week-end retreat enrollments.

The Cenacle is also open to non-Catholics who wish to profit by a few days spent in the quiet atmosphere of the convent.

In addition to conducting retreats, guilds, and study clubs, the Religious of the Cenacle instruct children and adults in Christian Doctrine.

Bishop Kearney is honorary chairman of the card party. Serving as chairman is Miss Jean Flanagan with Miss Patricia Doble as cochairman.

Tickets may be obtained at the Cenacle at 693 East Ave. (BR 1-8755) or from members of the ticket committee headed by Miss Helen Durnin and Miss Geraldine Moylan.

Says Fellow Poet

McGinley Poetry 'Too Worldly'

New York — Sandra Hochman is not a beat poet, but she may be beat once the word gets around. She boldly states that Phyllis McGinley's poems have not done very much for the life of the spirit.

"Her poems are too worldly," says Miss Hochman of the woman who has received a number of important Catholic honors and who was recently selected by "The Critic" magazine as one of the 15 most important Catholics in the U.S.

"Phyllis McGinley has never done anything to lift me out of my house, into the sky," she says. "I want to be an angel when I read a poet like Wallace Stevens. But with McGinley all I want to do is drop my housework for a while."

Because she chooses to "stress the spiritual" in poetry and because she is regarded as one of the important new poets (she won the coveted Yale University "Younger Poets Award" in 1963) the 29-year-old Miss Hochman was invited by Fordham University this year to teach a course called "Techniques of Modern Poetry."

She has no personal vendetta with Mrs. McGinley, whose verses she classifies as "entertainment," but she insists that "if poetry is not religious, even accidentally, it's not poetry."

A Bennington College graduate whose work has appeared in the "New Yorker," "Partisan Review" and whose new volume of poems, "The Vaudeville Marriage," is being published this month, Miss Hochman said her chief aim in teaching "is to convince others that to be a poet, you do not have to be an outcast, a nut."

"Lots of people use poetry as an excuse for weird behavior immorality and their own craziness," Miss Hochman said. "My own feeling is not only that poetry is spiritual, but that a poet is a very healthy person — joyous, happy. It's not something that comes from nihilism

"In this way I think I'm different from many people of my generation. I'm not writing out of disgust or anger. I don't want to write poetry to change the world."

An ardent fan of a relatively unknown poet named Wallace Stevens, she has adopted his "idea of imagination through poetry being a way of putting the world in order."

Wallace Stevens, she said, was a lawyer-businessman "who peopled his poems with ordinary people and things." In her "Vaudeville Marriage" volume she too uses this technique as, for example, in one poem she practically runs through the Manhattan phone book's yellow pages.

In her classes, Miss Hochman is attempting to undo what she regards as the bad effects of earlier teaching the students have had in poetry.

Her students, which this past semester included 18 sophomores, listen with her to recordings of poets reading their work, and do exercises in "seeing" things. One of her favorite assignments is to ask that they pick out a common object and set down 25 different ways of looking at the object, poetically.

"I'm not interested in teaching experts," she said. "In fact, poetry is not as useful to anyone as it is to the person who expresses it."

A native of New York City, Miss Hochman had her first poem published when she was 16, in "New World Writing." For two years she conducted a radio program called "Poems in Print," during which she interviewed the poets ("I like talking to poets because they're honest a poet is not a performer").

Teaching three classes a week, she continues her writing, composing her poems on a giant-size Swiss typewriter. "I think I've done my best writing since I started teaching. And there is always something a poet has to say."

Concert Set At Cathedral

"An Evening of Contemporary Church Music" will be presented at Sacred Heart Cathedral Sunday, April 24, at 8 p.m.

Donald Meminger, organist and director of Holy Rosary parish choir, said compositions by Jean Langlais of Paris and Father Russell Woollen of Washington will highlight the organ and choir program.

Seneca Falls 'College Night'

Seneca Falls—Students planning to attend college are invited to a "College Night" at St. Patrick's church hall to hear three college officials explain qualifications for entry.

Scheduled for Tuesday, April 19, at 8 p.m., the program is sponsored by the parish Family Guidance Group with Mrs. Franklin Buroughs as chairman.

Basilian Father Joseph Dorsey of St. John Fisher College, Sister M. Sophia of Nazareth College and Dr. W. Robert Bokelman of Eisenhower College will detail academic, economic and other factors of college life.
