"The Forced Marriage," a one act farce by Moliere, was presented in the Nazareth College auditorium, Tuesday, May 3 at 4:30 p.m.

The play was produced by students under the auspices of the Drama Club and directed by Dan Wissman, a senior at St. John Fisher College.

St. John Fisher and Nazareth students included in the cast were: Bill Gaffke, Diane DeMay, Robert Shea, Greg Houston, Thomas Dawber, Michael McKenna, Katharine Penfold, Fran Daley, Thomas Hughes and Thomas Leary.

Working behind the scenes were: Andrea Izzo (costume chairman), Mary Santiago, (set design), Pat Bankowski (set construction) and Louise Mantey (publicity).

Ecumenism Meet Held At Orthodox Church

Geneva—Ecumenism was the theme at St. Michael's Greek Orthodox Church recently when Father Raymond P. Nolan, pastor of St. Stephen's Church; the Sisters of St. Stephen's and DeSales Convents; and members of the Rosary Society were guests at an evening Paschal Service.

Father Gabriel White, pastor of St. Michael's Church, delivered the sermon.

Father White commented that this is the first time in the history of St. Michael's Church that a group from St. Stephen's has made an official visit. He said he was happy that it had occurred during his pastorate and expressed the hope that it will be only one of many visits.

After the four refreshments were served including the bread which was blessed by Father White and distributed by him and by Father Nolan.

Fresh spring flowers were used in the table decorations for the occasion. Discussions, questions, and dialogue continued during the social hour among members of both societies and the Sisters who were present.

Mrs. Abraham Baroody is president of St. Mary's Society and Mrs. George Miltz of St. Stephen's Society.

More than 100 parishioners and guests attended the evening service and social hour.

Former Exec

Seeks Purpose In Mission Post

Milwaukee — In the past, Henry A. Mullen's friends and business associates would not be surprised whenever his picture — showing distinguished, executive-type features — appeared in the business news section of the daily paper or in the columns of an industrial trade magazine, along with a story about a promotion or a new honor that had come to this high-salaried division manager of a leading metallurgical company.

But several weeks ago they were indeed surprised.

They had learned that the 54-year-old Mullen had quit his job, had taken one paying 75 per cent less, and was on his way to Africa "to spend the rest of my life" working for Catholic Relief Services.

He did it, he said, for selfish reasons.

"I've always had a concern for unfortunate people, a desire to help," said Mullen. "But then there's a selfish motive. I expect to get something out of it: a sense of satisfaction, of happiness, that you can't get in an industrial job; a singleness of purpose in trying to be a good Christian.

"I know that right now is an important time in the history of the world, with the developing countries and the Church's interest in them. I want to be part of that history rather than standing by, reading about it."

With his wife, Mary, Mullen last Spring began making plans to leave his position as a division manager at Ampco Metal Inc., a Milwaukee firm that is a leader in the resistance-welding industry, which is involved in the production of electrical conductors.

In fact, Mullen himself was an industry leader. As vice president of the Resistance Welding Manufacturers' Association, he was scheduled to become president of that national trade organization at the end of the year.

"But if you wait, all of a sudden you're incapacitated in some way and you never get to do it," Mullen said. "My wife and I have thought about it for years, and last May we discussed it quite seriously. I contacted the Catholic Relief Service people and told them I'd be happy to go anywhere."

To be accompanied by his wife (they have two daughters, both in college) Mullen has been assigned to Leopoldville, where he will be an assistant program director for about a year before his probable reassignment to a West African country, where his fluency in French will be of value—not to mention his executive ability.

"I do have a mind for development," he said, "and a great deal of the work that has to be done in the developing countries must have a good, sound business approach.

"You work on trying some way to help them develop their own economy, helping them to start community development projects that have a good chance to be self-supporting."

Prior to his departure for Africa March 18, Mullen and eight other new Catholic Relief Service staffers went through an intensive two-week training period in New York, where they learned the details of distributing food, clothing and medicine and the setting up of self-help projects.

"Organizations like Catholic Relief Services were not in existence when I got out of college," Mullen said, offering one reason why he did not get involved in such work at a younger age. A native of Montague, Mass., who grew up in Lawrence, Mullen graduated from Boston's Northeastern University with a chemical engineering degree in 1933.

He worked his way up to a position with the Ford Motor Company in Willow Run, Michigan, where he was supervisor of welding control and development from 1941 to 1945, when he joined Ampco.

Meanwhile, his "concern for unfortunate people" was being channeled into such organizations as the St. Vincent de Paul Society, with whom he worked among inner-city minority groups in Milwaukee, and the Holy Name Society, for whose lecture bureau he had been speaking on antidiscrimination themes since 1949.

The Third Order of St. Francis also attracted him, and it was at one of its meetings that he met his wife.

Mullen's friends and business associates, after getting over their surprise at his decision to leave industry and work for the Church, wished him well in letters and in phone calls, some of them coming from long-time competitors, whose "bon voyage" might be taken two ways.

"But," said Mullen, "they all seemed to approve of the move, and some of them said that they've long been wanting to do the same thing."

The RYAN HOMES Tradition
"GIVE THE CUSTOMER MORE FOR HIS MONEY!"

In a time when living costs rise, the price of Ryan homes are consistently lower than other homes of comparable space. The reason is the solid value that has become a Ryan tradition.

After almost a half century of building homes, with sales in excess of 6,000 homes in the last three years, Ryan knows how to hold the line on prices. A Ryan customer enjoys an average $1500* in extra features and price reduction through this volume buying program.

When you step inside a Ryan home, you'll notice how each area is planned for smooth traffic flow. And you'll see extra features such as automatic appliances, bathroom luxuries, and many, many more. Plan to inspect a Ryan home in one of the listed locations today.
