'Pill' Causing Damage, Boston Doctor Warns

Boston — (RNS) — Serious physical damage suffered by a certain number of young women after they used "birth control" pills was described by a noted Catholic physician before the Archdiocesan Council of Catholic Women in convention here.

Dr. William A. Lynch, chief of the medical staff of Carney Hospital of the Boston archdiocese, charged that the pill has been thrown on the market like peanuts. He claimed that in the dormitory of a women's college in Boston the pills were left in a "goldfish bowl" for general consumption.

Researchers are primarily concerned with the evidence of thrombo-embolic phenomena leading to strokes among young women who have taken the pill, he said. "In one of the biggest cities of New England," Dr. Lynch told the convention, "five young women known to have taken the pill suffered strokes, something almost unknown among young women."

"Other possible side effects are swollen limbs and occurrence of lumps in the breast," he said.

Study Center For Liturgy

"Miami Beach" (RNS) — An interreligious World Center for Liturgical Studies is moving from Boca Raton, where it was located for more than three years to a site here beside an old Spanish monastery now used by the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Lynch said a preliminary study has indicated a relationship to malignancies in the breast and cervix and also "an unquestioned ability" of all contraceptives to produce diabetes, he claimed. Manufacturers of the birth control pill were allowed by the Federal Drug Administration to make exaggerated claims, not only about the pills as contraceptives but also as capable of affecting a woman's fertility.

Dr. Lynch said he agreed that over-population is a serious problem but one that cannot be countered by a pill in which serious reactions are found to be increasingly common.

Also, he said, the pills are too expensive and sophisticated for the people they are intended to reach.

England Said Lagging in Renewal

London — (RNS) — Britain's Roman Catholic hierarchy is under fire here, allegedly for not showing sufficient initiative in implementing the decrees of Vatican II.

And a prominent Abbot has expressed disappointment with the effects of the Council in the North of England, where Catholicism has some of its strongest strongholds.

This all came out in a religious program on Britain's independent television network. Criticism of the bishops came from Neil Middleton, a leading Catholic layman and managing director of a well-known publishing firm.

He charged that the hierarchy of England and Wales is sympathetic to the "open-window" ideas of the Council only because they had been told to be. Few of them understood yet what had "hit the Church," he said.

In the same program, Abbot Basil Christopher Butler of the famed Downside Abbey, western England, said he welcomed diversity in the Church and felt quite sure the English and Welsh bishops would not want to repress the coming changes.

But he expressed disappointment with the effects of the Council in the North of England. He added that he was expecting a major change now that bishops had a great deal of autonomy and were allowed to show more initiative.

It had to be remembered, he observed, that "loyalty was the supreme virtue of Roman Catholic Bishops in Britain" and they had been loyal to the rather traditionalistic point of view before the Council.

Group Promotes Vocations

Edmonton, Alta. — (NC) — A 12-member committee has been formed here to streamline and increase efforts to attract more students to St. Joseph's Seminary in order to alleviate a pending shortage of priests in the Edmonton archdiocese.

The Archdiocesan Society for Religious Vocations, composed of laymen, priests, nuns and Brothers, is headed by Father Albert Laisnez, archdiocesan director of vocations.

Recruitment techniques already in use in the archdiocese have been studied. The committee is launching a program to assure that all high school students who would be eligible for seminary entry will be approached to consider a vocation to the priesthood.
