Catholic Blood

A dramatic film religious objection to blasphemy — a rare top motion picture screen — being singled out for by the National Catholic Motion Pictures.

"Walk in the Shoes of Arthur Rank produced in the NCOMP cent newsletter, who discussed in its 'new films' department praised for its 'straight and convincing way' of a difficult subject.

The story is tragic. A boating accident in 8-year-old girl is severely injured and taken to a hospital where a doctor informs her parents that a brain fusion will be necessary for her life.

Her father refuses to sign for the transfusion that the family prohibits it and quotes the Bible: "Whoso eateth any manner of will set my face against."

The father insists thereby prohibits any interference as well as prohibition.

His daughter dies in his refusal, and the an agonistic condition tantamount to a has the father brought a Jewish lawyer de father, arguing that to risk his daughter's life rather than her.

"The question of the rights of individual extend can be a trouble within a democratic the NCOMP said, on the film. "When tion also involves the religious belief and the bills of parental the issues become difficult to define and charged with emotional responses."

Though the film ideas, the NCOMP does an excellent job of an incident into a situation without too obvious plot contrivance script by Janet Green McCormick plays fair conflicting characters right up to the verdict."

"The script also social times to give of various individuals of the judge to the neighbors.

"This careful account detail and perspective by shown by director den, who builds his the script, in the story rather than
