Nursing School Gets $116,000 Federal Grant

Hornell—St. James Mercy Hospital officials, last week received news that the School of Nursing had received a six year reaccreditation from the National League for Nursing and an announcement that the hospital's application for a $116,875 federal grant for nursing school had been approved.

The school of nursing earned the six year accreditation by meeting the criteria of the N.L.N.'s Department of Diploma Programs, the official accrediting agency for schools of nursing in the United States.

The N.L.N. seeks to improve and further nursing programs through accrediting policies, standards and procedures which are based on principles widely accepted and tested in other types of education—general and professional.

Sister Mary Thomas, director of the School of Nursing commented: "It is only through the cooperation of all the school faculties in the past and present, and through the interest of our board members, hospital personnel, members of the community, and the prayers of the Sisters of Mercy, that this accreditation has been made possible."

Hospital chaplain, Reverend John L. Coonan commented, "It is a tribute to the hard work done to meet the standards of the National League of Nursing and promises greater things for the future of the school."

Grant Aids Nursing Center
A telegram from Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, and a phone call from Rep. Charles Goodell notified the hospital of the approval of the federal grant. A building, which formerly housed the Hickey-Freeman Co. will be converted into a nurse training center with the funds received. This grant comes under the Nurse Training Act of 1964, which provides federal aid to students of nursing and schools of nursing.

According to Sister Mary Scholastica, hospital administrator, the grant represents 50 percent of the total cost of renovation which will include construction of classrooms, labs and offices. The architectural firm, Barrows, Parks, Morin, Hall and Brennan of Rochester will draw up the plans.

Sister Scholastica said, "The news of receiving accreditation and the grant gives us much reason for joy. Our dreams of increasing our enrollment with the added facilities are on the road to becoming reality. It is an honor to belong to the N.L.N. for we know that by meeting their criteria, our standards are the highest and we can assure our students and our community, that we have a sound educational program."

The Hornell nursing school has a three-year diploma program and has an enrollment of 60 students.

Though I'd known her famous sister, Helena Rubinstein, since the advent of the ballerina skirt, (she's been the first woman I'd ever seen wearing one) I had met her only surviving sister, Ceska Cooper, on the pages of Helena Rubinstein's last book "My Life for Beauty."

I sought her out while we were in London and thoroughly enjoyed the meeting. While I had heard first hand of Madame's beauty regime and later read it in detail in Part II of her book, I had no idea of Mrs. Cooper's. Quickly, she told me that while Madame had relied exclusively on exercises, Mrs. Cooper swears by the "machines" and massages.

Remembering that Madame Rubinstein had written an entire chapter on "Eat Your Way to Beauty" and had included her rules and menus, I wondered about Ceska's. "I have a simple breakfast and a very small lunch except if I go out to lunch. Actually, most of the time I have but one really good meal a day. That's dinner. I like to take my time and enjoy it."

As for definite amounts of sleep, Mrs. Cooper doesn't worry about how much or how little she gets. But to assist the machines and massage, she exercises weekdays at her summer home outside Dorling when she gardens and enjoys a brisk game of croquet with her many friends. "My guests also play cards or talk. Everybody does what he likes and we have many good times."

Seeking to compare the London salon with that in New York, Ceska answered that the major emphasis in makeup there is on the eyes while New York has a big following of wig-wear-

"Wigs are not quite that popular here," she explained. "In New York, they have a boutique. We don't in London. Here we feature treatments and preparations as our specialties."

Then with a special twinkle in her eye, she continued, "However, we have a great deal more emphasis on the knees here in London since the short, short skirt seems to have started here. So we do a lot of beautifying knees with deep massage and makeup, even perfume. Catching my look of surprise, Mrs. Cooper quickly added:

"Only the very young look good with their skirts above the knee. Some in London wear them as high as eight inches above." Checking the hem of Ceska Cooper's gown I observed it just barely covered her knees, a length which looked in perfect balance with her small figure.

"The length of each skirt should depend completely on the figure of the lady wearing it. It's such a personal matter. And there are only a few who have the courage to keep their hemlines where they really look best."

But only the very young seem to get away with the short, short skirt which we call the miniskirt and which, it started here in London, it seems to be sweeping many parts of the world," she smiled as if to drop the subject.

"Would you like a cup of tea?" she asked. "And do let us do your hair and nails. And if you'd like your wig touched up, we'd be so happy to do it." In next to no time, I was seated before a mirror, her head stylist had whipped off my wig, the shampoo girl had begun her

Ceska Cooper waited past closing time and was there at the door to bid me goodbye. I left the London Salon of Helena Rubinstein with my wig, quite like that of Anne Boyley's tucked underneath my arm.
