Faculty Increase Listed At Nazareth College

Sister Helen Daniel, president of Nazareth College, has announced the following additions to the faculty for next year. She said that the increasing number of students, both freshmen and upperclass transfer students, as well as curricular enrichment, necessitate a substantial increase in faculty.

Two professors will be added to the History and Political Science Department: Richard Del Vecchio and George Telatnik.

Del Vecchio received his B.A. degree from Holy Cross College, a Master of Arts in Teaching from Harvard University and his Ph.D. from the University of Notre Dame. His teaching experience includes American History, World History and Latin American History at Notre Dame.

Telatnik received both his Bachelor's and his Master's degrees from Niagara University and he is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Toronto. His major research interests are in the field of the History of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

He is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies and was instrumental in the formation of the National Historical Honor Fraternity chapter at Niagara University. He was assistant to chairman of the History Department.

Joining the Department of English will be Mrs. Roxann R. Bustos, who received both her undergraduate and graduate degrees at the University of Rochester, and Miss Monica McAlpine, an alumna of Nazareth College, who is a candidate for a Ph.D. at the University of Rochester. Miss McAlpine is a Woodrow Wilson scholar, the recipient of a New York State College Teaching Fellowship and the winner of a N.D.E.A. fellowship, which she used at the University of Rochester.

The Philosophy Department faculty will be increased to four next year by the addition of John Claude Curtin and Bernard J. McDonnell. Curtin received his Bachelor's degree from Immaculate Conception Seminary and his Licentiate in Philosophy at Institut Catholique, Paris, where he has also been following a program of advanced study.

McDonnell received his B.A. from St. John's University and his M.A. from Laval University, where he is a Ph.D. candidate.

507 Students End Summer At Fisher

The regular summer session at St. John Fisher College ended officially Friday, Aug. 5, with a record enrollment of 507 students completing examinations in 48 courses.

Student enrollment was 13 per cent higher than a year ago. In addition, 15 high school students participated in a special Biology Workshop program. Non-credit programmed courses in mathematics and English accounted for additional enrollment.

The students represented 75 colleges and universities from throughout the United States and Canada. Slightly more than half of them are regular students at either Fisher or Nazareth College. Twenty-eight enrollees are members of religious orders.

Summer session faculty numbered 31, 24 of whom are regular members of the Fisher teaching staff. Twelve of the 48 courses offered are not taught in the regular academic year at the college.

150 Delegates Attend Meet In Washington

One hundred and fifty Rochester delegates attended the International Convention of the Knights of St. John and Ladies Auxiliary in Washington, D.C., on July 8 to 13.

The convention Mass was offered by Cardinal Lawrence Sheehan of Baltimore at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception and the sermon was preached by Archbishop John J. Kroll of Philadelphia; the Supreme Spiritual Advisor of the order.

Welcome was extended by Archbishop O'Boyle of Washington. Prior to the Mass the Rose Window donated by the Supreme Ladies Auxiliary was blessed by Archbishop Kroll.

Thomas Maloney Last Rites Held Solemn Requiem Mass for Thomas J. Maloney of Cleveland, Ohio, formerly of Rochester, was offered at St. Mark's Church, Cleveland, on July 26 by Monsignor Wilfred T. Craugh, assisted by Fathers Joseph P. Brennan and Phillip Marcin.

Doctor, 68

Joins Brothers To Serve Poor

Sherbrooke (NC) He started out in life 42 years ago as a physician. After 12 years, he switched to a political career which lasted more than a quarter-century. But now, at age 68, he's convinced that he's found his real calling — a Brother in the Order of St. Camillus.

Brother Camille Pouliot, who is stationed at St. Vincent's Hospital here, recalled it wasn't easy achieving his place in religious life. For one thing his age — he was 65 at the time — was against him. He made a trip to Rome, where he found the top officials of the brotherhood skeptical, but finally convinced them he could adapt himself to the rigors of their life.

Now he's happy — working hard at being "a spiritual physician" to his fellow man.

CAMILLE POULIOT married Anne Eva MacDonald in 1924.

as he embarked on his career as a physician. Earlier he had been overseas with the Canadian Expeditionary Force in World War I and had served two years in Siberia.

Dr. and Mrs. Pouliot raised a family of five sons and two daughters. He abandoned the practice of medicine in 1936 for a career in politics. For 26 years he was a member of the Quebec Legislature and also had served as Minister of Game and Fisheries in the Quebec government.

In 1962 his political career came to an end when his political party was defeated. About the same time, his wife died. Dr. Pouliot, always a devout Catholic, began thinking of spending the rest of his days in religious life.

Vincent Prince, writing in La Presse of Montreal, recounted the doctor's search for the best way he could help the suffering. He knew well the tragedy of illness—his wife had suffered several years before her death.

One of his daughters, a Carmelite nun, suggested that Dr. Pouliot spend some time with the Carmelites, then with the Benedictines, in meditation and prayer.

One day while at prayer in the Benedictines' chapel at St. Benoit du Lac, Dr. Pouliot noticed three members of the Order of St. Camillus and paid particular attention to the red cross on their habits — a reminder of Christ's blood-stained cross while the Brothers go about their work of ministering to the sick.

He called at the brotherhood's establishment in Canada, but got little encouragement in his quest to join the community. Most of the Brothers he saw were Italians — in fact, he learned later there was only one Canadian in the community in this country at that time.

With the help of the bishop of Gaspe, he got in touch with the superior general of the Brothers in Rome. He went to Rome, where he convinced the top officials he could adapt to the life of a Brother. Last summer he returned to Canada as Brother Camille.

His medical knowledge and years of practice have proven a great asset in his new career. He makes daily visits to the homes of chronically ill. He works in collaboration with the Sherbrooke Fraternity of the Sick, a charitable endeavor founded by Elaine Coderre-Poirier, an invalid.

DISCIPLINE

By Mary Tinley Daly

Discipline in the home, that widely discussed topic of today, is of perennial interest and has been ever since the time of our first parents, Adam and Eve.

So believes Mrs. Patricia Schiller, clinical psychologist, president of the Middle Atlantic Division of the American Association of Marriage Counselors, and herself mother of two children.

Living in paradise, with none of the striving to "keep up with the Joneses," the first Adam family had its problems. The eldest son, Cain, achieved perpetual, if unenviable, distinction by becoming the world's first juvenile delinquent, "doing in" his brother Abel.

From the First Family of Paradise Valley to the billions of families living today, discipline, leading eventually to self-discipline, sign of real maturity, is of prime importance. It can, and should, according to this authority, build up competencies in areas including judgment, health, creativity, empathy and intelligence.

Mrs. Schiller, like other conscientious parents, feels that discipline should begin at a very early age, making a child aware of acceptance, "feeling good about himself" with neither over-protection, "saving" him from responsibilities, nor "harsh, restrictive, super-critical attitude.

What Discipline Means

Citing a survey of what "discipline" means at various ages, it was said that punishment is the predominant factor noted; to a kindergartner, it meant a spanking when he pushed his little sister around; to a high school student, deprivation of the car "when I stayed out too late"; to a college student, curtailment of allowance for over-spending the previous month.

Seldom, Mrs. Schiller commented, is the use of praises and rewards regarded as a part of discipline, yet these two positive approaches in the parent-child relationship have inestimable value.

"We've all heard the complaint, quite just to our way of thinking, 'You hardly ever notice when I do things right, it's only when I mess 'em up, and then you jump me'."

Backing up the efficacy of the praise-and-reward aspect of discipline, Mrs. Schiller cited a seven-year study sponsored by the National Institutes of Health, and carried out by the University of California at Davis, on 1,500 boys approximately 10 years of age. The study showed that far greater success was achieved by consistent, firm discipline combined with praise and reward than by the use of harsh punishment.

At your house and at ours, over the years, informal "studies" probably bear this out.

"How nice your room looks today, everything tidied up!" will achieve, if not a tomorrow-and-tomorrow-and-tomorrow result, at least a tomorrow and day-after-tomorrow effect.

Standards by Example

Another point made by psychologist Schiller was twofold: the indirect effect of discipline applied to one member of a family upon other family members, and implied setting of standards whereby a child absorbs by observation the value judgments of his parents. An example of the latter, she pointed out, is a father who cherishes and proudly wears his Phi Beta Kappa key, moreover who keeps his intellectual curiosity keen, his love of learning alive. Parents who enjoy reading, learning and discussing with their children interesting topics don't have to slave-drive their young people endlessly to "get at your books."

Children grumble and complain, of course, about "dumb stuff" but they sense that Dad and Mom had at one time to lay similar groundwork of fundamentals — and Phi Beta Kappa keys must be earned, not bought.

Firmness and consistency in discipline, were stressed by Mrs. Schiller, but combined with understanding and tolerance. "Trial and error are implicit in the learning process," she said, "and errors do be expected — else why do we have erasers on pencils?"

Honest differences of opinions, even among adults, are to be expected and a straightforward admission of "I was wrong" can do a lot to give a child perspective.

Discipline, that dictionary-defined "state of order maintained by training and control," is a many-faceted thing when applied to a home situation but one well worth the effort.
