meeting, their enthusiasm for their work, their unselfish spirit in serving God and their neighbor — it certainly spurs me on to greater efforts as a priest."

Loyal as he is to the Legion approach, Father Marvin doesn't think its "the last word" or the only word in the lay apostolate. He encourages his co-workers to collaborate with other Catholic groups closely since "there's plenty of work for all of us."

He also is willing to admit that the Legion could use further updating, which he is sure will come, but insists that "even as it is, it's solid and effective."

In season and out of season, Father Marvin is a quiet but convinced promoter of the Legion among his fellow priests. "I tell them," he states, "that if they really want to use lay apostles, the Legion of Mary could be invaluable in their parish."

In Bengal Village

Mercy to the Children

Chitagong, East Pakistan—(RNS)—French Canadian Holy Cross Brother Flavian Laplante is known here as a man of many talents — teacher, builder of schools, farms and houses, and organizer of cooperatives.

But in the Hindu fishing community of Diang, across the Karnaphuli River from Chitagong, where he lives and works, he is something special. He is the man who used his other talents as fund-raiser and publicity man to lift them out of hopeless poverty.

In 1943, while maintaining a camp for destitute people, the Brother Flavian became aware of the plight of Hindu fishermen. The army had imposed a scorched-earth policy on this part of the sub-continent. Fishing boats were confiscated and nets allowed to rot. Bengal was plagued by famine and the fishing community became truly destitute.

When World War II ended, Brother Flavian initiated a rehabilitation program by opening an orphanage and a school for Hindu children.

"At first," he recalled, "the fishermen's children didn't like going to classes. They were like little wild things, and they kept running away from the school."

They were so used to being free, they hated to be restricted in any way. But now they come to school, even during vacations, to play on the grounds.

He also noted that the Hindu community was experiencing trouble at the hands of Moslem neighbors who harassed them.

"It was a long-standing custom among some of them to indulge in acts of piracy," Brother Flavian explained, "by trying to steal the fishermen's catches, or even attempting to damage or rob their boats. Many times I went to court to help the fishermen present their cases."

By 1954, the orphans had grown up and Brother Flavian decided to close the orphanage as such and turn the premises into a school for both Hindu and Moslem children. He bought 80 acres of land from a local broker and the government gave him another 200 acres of hilly land. The school began with six bamboo huts (huts) and as many teachers.

In 1957, Brother Flavian went back to Canada for a year's leave. On his return, he was sent to Noakhali, some distance from the Chitagong area. In 1963, however, he was reassigned here.

Stop gassy acid upset after meals

with this "gas untrapping" indigestion discovery

Bubbles cause pressure, pain. Di-Gel breaks up gas, bloating acid.

Ateloo much? Drink too much? Too much that didn't "sit well"? Almost everybody overindulges from time to time. And pays for it in indigestion pain! That's when you'll be happy we told you about Di-Gel!

Di-Gel is more than an antacid! It's millions of silicone molecules actually "untrap" the stubborn gas that causes most ordinary indigestion discomfort. This releases stomach pressure and "unbloats" you. Then you feel comfortable again.

But that's not all! Di-Gel is an antacid too. Its antacid ingredient can "get at" excess acid better when stubborn gas bubbles are cleared away. Its soothing ingredients coat irritated stomach lining more easily, more thoroughly.

Ordinary antacids have no effect on stomach gas, no actual direct anti-gas action whatever.

That's why Di-Gel can offer you more complete stomach relief than any plain antacid.

You'll like the way it combats heartburn, sweetens stomach, dispels distention and nausea. You'll like the way it stops gassy acid upset after meals.

A drug store product, Di-Gel comes in creamy-smooth liquid for home use and soft chewable tablets handy for carrying. Fresh, minty taste! Will not constipate.

Take Di-Gel after or between meals as directed on the label. It is guaranteed to give you the most completely satisfying relief you ever had or money back from Plough, Inc. Save 50¢ on large size. Ask for—and see that you get—genuine Di-Gel!
