Christianity Attracts Japanese

Hong Kong — (NC) — The "tantalizing case" of modern Japan, in which a nation is accepting the principles of Christianity while staying aloof from any allegiance to it, was put before a Protestant-organized ecumenical conference here by a Catholic priest.

The Faith and Order meeting of the East Asia Christian Conference was held at the University of St. Joseph, J. Spae, O.F.M., that "Japan is getting off her theological island" and that Japanese Shintoism and Buddhism are drawing more and more upon the Christian way of life. This can have great promise for Christianity throughout all Asia, he told the delegates from 18 nations.

Father Spae is the director of the Oriens Institute for Religious Research in Tokyo. He is also a consultant in the Vatican Secretariat for Non-Christians in Rome and represented the secretariat at the meeting here.

HE LISTED some of the signs which indicate the extent of the movement toward Christianity in Japan:

• Polls show about 3,000,000 who say they are Christians, but the total of those baptized is no more than 700,000. "Who are these 2,300,000 self-styled followers of Christ?" Father Spae wondered.

• "New" religions in Japan, which enlist many as 20,000,000 persons, show particularly strong Christian influences.

• An official guideline for Japanese teachers called "The Image of the Ideal Japanese" shows a marked shift away from Shinto, Confucian or Buddhist ideals to those of Christianity.

• Students of the Japanese way of life say that the "Christianizing" is not the result of any effort by local Christians, but rather a product of Japan's searching for values from the world outside.

• The pull toward Christianity continues despite confusion about the Christian churches. Inquiries show that Japanese in the main love and respect Christ, but think Christians are harsh and haughty, so preoccupied with salvation that they forget human problems.

• The Bible holds such an attraction for Japanese that the country is third in the world, behind the U.S. and India, in distribution of it.

• Many Buddhists have adopted the slogan that they are the real Christians of the 20th century because "they love one another."

Father Spae said that neither theology nor religious history gives the answer on how a modern non-Christian nation like Japan will come to accept Christianity. But he said that history in Japan proves "religious rubbing of minds, hearts and elbows" has a two-way effect. It forces the local religions to re-examine their own claims, and forces Christianity to question whether it is everything it must be to all men.

Father Spae reported that "the majority of Japan's religions take an increasingly favorable attitude towards the Christian presence in their midst. While irked at the ab-
