Aquinas Alumni Group Ready to Organize

To be a graduate of Aquinas Institute may not mean instant success, but apparently it helps. At least that's the way things appeared last Monday evening at the Dewey Avenue school when fifty former students gathered at their Alma Mater to discuss the advisability of forming an Alumni Association.

The group, selected at random from nearly 12,000 graduates of Aquinas over the past forty-five years, represented most of the major professions. There were doctors, lawyers, teachers, engineers, business executives, men connected with the military, and a few independent contractors.

The gathering was the culmination of a series of meetings of class officers and leaders from the past two to five years called by Father Leon G. Hart, C.S.B., Aquinas principal, to determine the need and usefulness of an alumni association. The idea received unanimous approval.

Milo Tomanovich, vice-president of the class of 1955 and a local attorney, was chosen president. A nominating committee was formed to present a slate of candidates for the initial meeting scheduled for the fall. In the meantime, other committees will compile mailing lists and begin the enormous task of contacting graduates.

Father Cyril F. Carter, C.S.B., a teacher at Aquinas for twenty-five years and current athletic director will act as chaplain for the group. Father Carter will be honored by former

Human Values In Urban Plans

Newton, Mass. — (RNS) — A Roman Catholic editor said here that the forces of technology and learning should be placed in "the role of servant to man" for the creation of "cities of the future" offering him a better world than he has known, leading him to a dream he can only now dimly discern.

Msgr. Francis J. Lally, editor of The Pilot, Boston Archdiocesan newsweekly, spoke here at a Boston College Citizens Seminar. Some 400 state, city, business and religious leaders took part in the seminar on urban planning.

The editor, who is chairman of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, stressed that unless human values are a paramount concern in urban planning the project would be "a fraud, a snare, and ultimately a failure."

Msgr. Lally noted that "a city for the citizen" is not a new idea "but it is one that easily slips into the background" when competing claims demand the attention of urban planners.

"We need well planned cities, well designed ones; we need usable space and a return on investment; we need nature and beauty; we need history and we need commerce and industry, education and science; we need every discipline known to man, and we need all of these in quantity and in quality," the editor said.

"But," he added, "we need the citizen before all else, the man and his family, his home and his office, his land and his tree; we need a context in which man can live a full life without being crushed or compromised."

Turning to "technology and learning in the role of servant to man," Msgr. Lally declared, "It is not too much to speak of the servant city, the city of human dimensions, built not to impress but to assist, built not for grandeur but for living, built not for the profit but for people."

Aquinas Nine Eyes Another Winning Season

By WHIT JOHNSON
The Aquinas Institute baseball team is shooting for its seventh straight winning season and despite a couple of question marks, the team could well do it.

The Irish finished with a 12-5 record last year but was better than its record indicated, the year before, Aquinas posted a fine 15-2 record.

With only a handful of returnees, Coach Father John Menger will have to rely on a number of underclassmen.

The pitching staff, which offers five players, is also a question mark as is the team's overall hitting and defense.

Heading the list of returnees is Senior Captain Mike Beer, the six-foot veteran is a third baseman.

Two of his infield mates are also veterans and are solid hitters and fielders. They are beer and Rich D'Elton, at shortstop and first-base respectively. Steve Johnson will hold down second base.

Beer and Rich D'Elton are the team's leading hitters. D'Elton is a fine-drive hitter with good power, although a five-foot-ten, 160 pounder.

Senior Mike Sommartino figures to be the No. 1 hurler. He was a starter last season as a junior.

Doug Miller appears to have the catching spot. A football player, he has been impressive in practice.

The team opened yesterday against John Marshall, too late to report in this issue. Next game will be Monday, April 17 when the Irish travel to Jefferson.

The following day, April 18, Aquinas hosts East High at 4 p.m.
