THOSE WHO SERVE

One of the unfortunate misconceptions of our national life is that there is something demeaning about service, that the person who serves is somehow inferior to those he serves. This often accounts for the carelessness and even surliness of many people in so-called service capacities. Their poor service is a negative way of asserting their equality. Yet, a cornerstone of Christianity is the ennobling nature of service to others, and this is how we feel about rendering assistance in time of need. Surely, the man who performs a service cheerfully and competently, whatever it is, is not demeaning himself but fulfilling himself, and in such fulfillment one finds his true worth.
