

Life gets back to normal on quiet side street in Jerusalem within month of week-long Arab-Israeli war.

Shadows of sunset creep up the ancient walls of Jerusalem, July 1, first Sabbath barriers of twenty years came down between Arab and Jewish sections of city. Throngs of Israelis leave through Jaffa Gate after visiting "wailing wall" at site where Solomon's Temple once stood. Minarets of mosques and church towers indicate city is also sacred to Christians and Moslems. Mount of Olives rises in background.

More than 20,000 Jews trooped to the "wailing wall" — only surviving remnant of their ancient Temple at Jerusalem — on first Sabbath in twenty years Jews were admitted to area. Throngs included rigid Hasidim as also many who consider "the wall" more an historic national monument.

Two Israeli soldiers probe for mines in former no-man's land between Jordan and Israel near Bethlehem.

Moslems by the thousands filled the vast courtyard of Mosque of Omar in Jerusalem on Friday, June 30, two days after Israelis incorporated once-Jordan-held section of city into larger, newer Jewish section. (EINS) Photo
