

Research Scientist Heads Catholic Laymen's Group

Minneapolis — (RNS) — The first president of the National Association of Laymen, an independent Roman Catholic group, is a Honeywell research scientist whose current laboratory project is trying to stimulate tiny cells with odor.

When not engaged in scientific ventures, Dennis Landis is trying to stimulate Roman Catholic laymen to seek a larger voice in the life of their Church.

As a result of his election at the founding meeting of the laymen's association recently in St. Paul, Landis anticipates a lot of travel during the coming year.

He is also president of the Association of Christians for Church Renewal, an independent organization of Catholic laymen in the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis, which served as host to the national meeting.

Landis, a 32-year-old graduate of St. Thomas College, St. Paul, told the national association that today's Catholic laity is like "a sleeping giant that is coming awake."

The giant is not power-hungry, he said, but is seeking a "free, open and responsible voice."

He warned that the laity would have to be given a voice soon or apathy would creep in and "a lot of people will leave the institutional Church." He said the laymen wish to cooperate with their priests and bishops "to build a team effort."
