Camden Prelate Dies at 55, Mission Expert

Camden, N.J. — (NC) — Archbishop Celestine J. Damiano, 55, bishop of Camden, died of a pulmonary embolus, a blood clot that blocked passage of air into his lung.

The archbishop died Monday, October 2, at Our Lady of Lourdes hospital here where he had been hospitalized for two weeks, and was recovering from surgery for removal of gall stones.

He served as assistant pastor of several parishes in the Buffalo diocese until 1947, when he was called to Rome to serve in the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith. After the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization moved its headquarters to Rome, Msgr. Damiano served as an associate observer, and at times observer, for the Vatican FAO. He was then named apostolic delegate in South Africa in 1952.

Archbishop Damiano was not officially recognized by the South African government, but he won respect for his ability to maintain a harmonious relationship with the whole diplomatic corps. Bishop Fulton J. Sheen of Rochester, N.Y., formerly U.S. director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, once described Archbishop Damiano's assignment as "one of the most difficult diplomatic posts in the world."

Archbishop Damiano's interest in the missions did not wane when he was transferred to the Camden, N.J. See in 1960. He encouraged Camden priests to volunteer for service in the diocese of Jatal, Brazil, and told them to prepare for the selection and training of married deacons there. He also formed an organization called "Men of the Brazilian Missions" to raise funds for the Jatal See.

Archbishop Damiano proved himself an innovator in the Camden diocese, becoming one of the first bishops in the nation to set up a nine-member personnel board to advise him in assignments affecting the clergy. He told priests he wanted their frank opinions of their own assignments as well as of pastoral needs of the whole diocese.

Pope Transfers Two Bishops

JULIET IS COUNSELED by understanding Friar in scene from "Romeo and Juliet" to be presented by the National Shakespeare Company at Cardinal Mooney High School tonight.

Romeo and Juliet At Mooney Today

The world's greatest love story will be recreated by a distinguished company of professional actors when Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET is presented at Cardinal Mooney High School at 1:30 p.m. today, Oct. 27 by the National Shakespeare Company.

This is the troupe that in four years has emerged as America's leading classical touring company. It is coming to Rochester as part of its fifth national tour of ninety nine cities in twenty seven states and Canada.

ROMEO AND JULIET is Shakespeare's most touching romance and ranks second only to HAMLET in popularity among the Bard's plays. Seldom in stage history has so much teeming action been packed into the telling of a tender love story as is done in this tale of squabbling Montagues and Capulets, whose antagonisms are resolved only with the deaths of a son and daughter from each of the hostile houses.

The two protagonists will be portrayed by Curt Williams, who has appeared with the New York Shakespeare Festival and Off-Broadway in THE FANTASTICS, and his Juliet will be enacted by Dana Ivey, known for her work with the Stratford Ontario Shakespeare Company.

Washington — (NC) — "The era of the foreign missionary movement as we have known it is definitely over," a missionologist asserted here. But a theologian immediately disagreed.

Jesuit Father Avery Dulles took issue with Franciscan Father Roman Hoffman's statement that the foreign missionary structure has served its purpose and should be dismantled.

Father Hoffman, associate professor of missionology at the Catholic University of America, and Father Dulles, professor of systematic theology at Woodstock (Md.) College, spoke to 1,000 delegates at the 18th annual meeting of the Mission-Sending Societies in mid-September.

Father Hoffman said the foreign missionary movement is over "because the goals and objectives of the movement are no longer valid and justifiable." He said these goals — which he listed as propagation of the faith, conversion of pagans, salvation of souls, establishment of the Church and bringing the benefits of Christian civilization and culture to non-Christians — were based on a faulty conception of the mission.
