Slang 'Throws' Aquinas Exchange Student

By Whit Johnson
Aquinas student Paul Polzien is one of 3,000 teenagers from 57 countries who are attending American schools this year in an exchange program.

Polzien arrived in the U.S. by air, along with several other exchange students who were to live in various parts of the country.
His high school in Wurzburg is the Riemenschneidergymnasium, a school comparable in size and curriculum to Aquinas. He said he felt right at home the very first day at the local school.

Speaking of his experience during the past year, Paul said, "I have learned that people are much the same all over the world. We may speak different languages or have different customs, but our hopes and dreams for the future are much the same."

CBS Play

The television industry complains from time to time that while viewers are quick to criticize when the level of programming is poor, few persons take the time to write or call stations and networks when something of value has been offered.

It is a legitimate complaint. Human nature takes pleasure in finding fault and reporting same. The communicating of positive reactions is not in the same enjoyable category for those who revel in adverse feelings.

And although I may enjoy grouching as much as the next viewer, this column, in an effort to be fair, is a thank you to CBS for its series "CBS Playhouse" which recently presented its fourth show of the season.

I happen to be one of those who believes, perhaps erroneously, that television was never more creative, imaginative nor more entertaining than when the airwaves were filled with the weekly dramatic offerings of such shows as "Playhouse-90," "The Steel

Mister

Catholic Press Features
Pittsburgh — If you took a minister, a child psychiatrist and a Captain Kangaroo and wrapped them all into one person, you would get a Fred Rogers.

You would also get that very rare combination of an entertaining, pleasant and instructive TV program for young children, called "Misterogers' Neighborhood."

The show is on Channel 21, daily at 5 p.m.
"It is a mother's delight. It is, if anything, a Captain Kangaroo and is guaranteed to be the only television show on the air that can make a 4-year-old boy yearn to mop the kitchen."

That is a typical rave — from syndicated columnist Phyllis Battelle — for the half-hour weekday series created by Rogers, an ordained United Presbyterian Church minister who chose children as his special ministry.

Rogers, 39, and the father of two young boys, 8 and 6, writes, produces, directs and stars in "Misterogers' Neighborhood," which is now appearing on shortly will be appearing on 120 National Educational Television affiliates throughout the country.

Designed for children between 3 and 8, the program features puppets, songs and patter — each week's set of shows having one objective, such as helping the youngsters overcome fear of the dark, explaining why boys need haircuts, showing the importance of sharing things.

But what has earned "Misterogers' Neighborhood" its rapidly growing following is not its content, but its style
