Jesuit Sees Intercommunion Step to Unity

New York - (RNS) - Intercommunion, the practice in which Christians of different Churches share the Eucharist together, "may very well be a major step" towards full Christian unity, according to Father Bernard Cooke, a leading Jesuit theolo-

Father Cooke expresses this view in a preface to the book "Is the Last Supper Finished?" by Anglican Father Arthur A. Vogel. It is cheduled for publication Aug. 21 by Sheed

"The further we advance in serious ecumenical dialogue," Father Cooke says, "the more it becomes clear that the action of the Eucharist and the ministry which is exercised in it stand at the very focus of the questions that separate the various Christian Churches one from another."

"The action of the Eucharist." he continues, "is meant to be a key sign of Christian unity and until it becomes that, rather than a source of division, one cannot expect any real healing of the breach which now exists among Christians."

"It is in this context," he maintains, "that increasing interest has been expressed in the possibilities of intercommunion."

"This intercommunion," he adds, "will not of itself constitute Christian reunion in the full sense, but it may very well be a major step in that di-the "tent and sawdust revival meetings" of the "U.S. Bible belt." They have criticized the spending of money on what they call a "worship rally' while large segments of Colombia's population are in extreme poverty.

Advocates of the Eucharistic Congress claims that the international meeting will spark a genuine renewal of the faith in predominantly Catholic Colombia which will spread throughout the 225 million people in Latin America. They also claim that this renewal of "the bond of love," which is the theme of the conference. will lead to a vigorous and successful push for socio-economic reforms in accord with the Christian norms of social justice.

"The Eucharist provides spiritual nourishment to the Christian Community of God whose members must be made aware of their obligations toward their brothers and sisters in Christ," explained Msgr. Mario Revollo press representative for the Eucharistic Congress.

"This strengthening of the Christian community will result in a change of mentality. Feelings of selfishness will be replaced by an authentic feeling of oneness in Christian community expressed through the promotion of social justice for

The congress will bring together the Pope, 20 cardinals of the church, 300 bishops, thousands of priests and nuns and hundreds of thousands of pilgrims from rural Colombia and the rest of the world. A theological meeting and other events will run concurrently with the congress.

This city of two million people has been preparing for the congress and the papal visit for more than a year. New expressways have been cut through the colonial streets. A municipal project called Paulo VI had been erected to house 12,000 pilgrims. It will later be turned over to city residents.

The congress site itself, in the outlying district of El Salitre, is composed of five seating and standing areas capable of holding 305,000 peos ple. There is room for 750,000 more just outside the conference site. A circular temple in the middle is an open-air structure with a concrete canopy to keep off the city's fre-

Bogota which is 8,355 feet above sea level in the Andes, has undertaken an ambitious beautification campaign for the papal visit. Public and church buildings have been sandblasted and washed and residents have been urged to spruce up their houses and stores and to cultivate their gardens.

Several thousand ragged urchins who usually haunt the streets in the center of town begging and picking pockets have been deported to camps in the country. They will be allowed to return after the congress is over.

Theologian Defends Encyclical

Newark, N.J. -- (NC) - A profesfesor of dogmatic theology defended Pope Paul's encyclical on birth control and told priests who dissent from the encyclical that they are going against not only the Pope but "the consensus of his brother bishops as "To lead (our people) by our preaching and counsel to neglect this document is a betraval of our ministry, which is linked to that of the official church," said Father Anthony T. Padovano of Immaculate Conception Seminary, Darlington, N.J.

Father Padovano addressed 300 fellow priests of the Niwark Archdiocese at a meeting called to endorse the statement of dissent from the encyclical issued in Washington in the name of 87 theologians. At the conclusion of the meeting, 26 of the 300 Newark priests signed the statement of dissent, despite Father Padovano's defense of the encyclical.

"I accept the urging of some of my brother theologians that no American theologian be silent on this matter." Father Padovano stated. "I accept the encyclical Humanae Vitae. without qualification.

"It has been evident for years now that no matter which way the decision went the church would have to sustain a shattering jolt," the priest

Noting that the encyclical has been overwhelmingly accepted by the bish-Father Padovano said: "If we dissent, our argument is not only with Pope Paul VI but with the consensus of his brother bishops as well.

Declaring that the Pope "was careful to see that more than one side would be heard," Father Padovano "I am determined that more than one side of the theological community will be heard on this issue.'

"Since the release of the encyclical one side has been heard, loud and often, in the press and over the mass media. Those who disagree with them must now be heard, especially those who have demonstrated their endorsement of reform and renewal.

"Before liturgical reform and the civil rights issue became prominent in this country, a majority (of the church) were against both. Majority opinion is not, in itself, a guarantee of truth," Father Padovano said.

"There was no reason why Paul, or the international episcopate, was bound to accept the majority vote of a commission called in for consultation any more than the President of the United States must abide by the majority of his cabinet or endorse the latest plurality of a public opinion poll," the priest asserted.

"When Paul balanced his statements in previous encyclicals in an 'on the one hand, on the other hand' manner, he was ridiculed for indecisiveness by those same theologians who now dismiss him for having spoken decisively and unambiguously," Father Padovano stated.

Father Padovano stressed the need for compassion in implementing the encyclical. "Those who sin, will not be found only among those who reject this decision.
