An Adult Look at Charlie Brown

By PAT COSTA

The comic strip Peanuts starring Charlie Brown and friends is probably read by more adults than children. But when it came to the animated TV versions of the strip, I always felt that the small fry were being appealed to, particularly with the various stories being repeated so many times.

But, the newest Charlie Brown TV special was undoubtedly aimed at the adults. Doubtless the strip's creator, Charles Schulz, the half-hour program dealt with the "origin" of the strip and how it has evolved into the most successful cartoon of the era.

It must have been music to the ears of Charlie Brown followers to discover that Schulz succeeded with his strip only after having it turned down over and over again. It was in keeping with the spirit of the cartoon's philosophy and therefore fitting, the philosophy responsible for the strip's immense popularity.

As Schulz explained, many readers do daily battle with the same problems, hang-ups of Charlie Brown. They identify.

The special also showed how Snoopy found his foe, the Red Baron, the failure of the introduction of a cat into the strip and how Schulz gets his ideas.

It was a particularly timely program in its effort to point up the cartoon's popularity.

While theater players are bringing the characters to life on both coasts, the Snoopy and Charlie Brown emblems were on their way home from circling the moon. Apollo 10's Command and Lunar modules, given the names of the famous pair, had also been front page headlines for several days running.

It was time someone said it, but hearing it from a participant of a beauty contest

Problems of Age

Topic of 'Dare'

One of every ten Americans is over 65 years of age; only one of every fifty has the opportunity to enter an adequately run home for the aged. Treatment of this problem, as well as a commentary on current attitudes toward the aging American, will be highlights of this Sunday's "Dare" program, broadcast over television station WHEC at 1:30 p.m.

Father Albert P. Bartlett, S.J., moderator of the weekly discussion program presented by McQuaid Jesuit High School where he is rector, will have as his special guest Sister Mary Loretta, assistant administrator of St. Ann's Home for the Aged.

PEACHES FROM PERSIA

Believed to have been Persian in origin, peaches were regarded so highly there that they were given the name "Persian Apple." For centuries they had been a favorite of the Chinese people. Chinese writings 3,000 years ago first mentioned the peach as the symbol of longevity. In 1209, Genghis Khan found peaches there when he pierced the Great Wall.

CHURCH JANITORS FORM UNION

Rome — (RNS) — Church custodians and caretakers now have a legally organized trade union called "The Association of Liturgical Collaborators." Their contract provides for a 12-hour day and a 7-day week for a salary of $105 weekly and a bonus of four weeks' pay at Christmas.

POLAND HONORS CHARITY AIDE

Warsaw — (RNS) — The head of Church World Service in Poland has been honored by the government for his ten years work as liaison between the Protestant relief agency and the Polish ministry of health. Karel Mazel received the Knight's Cross of Polonia at a ceremony at the Ministry of Health.
