Cardinal Cushing Outlines Challenges Facing Men of Law

Worcester, Mass. — (NC)—Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston told a meeting of lawyers here that men of law as well as men of religion "owe an allegiance and a commitment to a set of values that is deeply rooted in law and religion."

Cardinal Cushing addressed the Worcester County Bar Association here in a program marking the delayed observance of "Law Day."

"The great challenge to men of law and men of religion," the cardinal said, "is to build the ancient ideals we cherish and press into the structure of a 20th century America."

In order to do this, the cardinal suggested using "a fusion of three common traditions—the Biblical tradition, with the moral law of responsibility at the core; the classical tradition, with its stress on the inner check, which includes the law of restraint, proportion and order, achieved by working; and the common law tradition, which teaches that the life of the law is response to human needs, that through knowledge, understanding and immersion in the realities of life, law can be made . . . to work itself 'pure'."

"Today, change is the most significant phenomenon of our time," Cardinal Cushing said. "The pressures for, and resistance against, change generate the high tensions which all too frequently erupt in bitter divisions in our society . . . The complexities of our times, the breadth of our challenge, the pressures of urbanization, the power of technology, racial turbulence and international strife have all combined to cause a certain confusion about values today."

"We all encounter a lot of people who are no longer sure what they believe in, or what there is left to believe in—who feel alone and adrift in their perplexities," he continued. "Today, everywhere we look, the symbols and the institutions of our society are under attack and subject to question—including our system of law as well as our systems of religion."
