Poor Script Dulls Emmy Show

By PAT COSTA

It's always a pleasant surprise to discover that an entertainer you've admired in character turns out to be just as admirable being himself.

Such was the case when actor comedian Harvey Korman of the Carol Burnett Show accepted a special Emmy award last Sunday

With charm, poise and no little wit he made his acceptance speech and in doing so turned out some of the better material of the evening.

Dialogue written for the emcees and presenters of the 21st Emmy Presentation Show was tasteless, irrelevant and without style.

Mery Griffin and Bill Cosby who shared host honors managed to overcome poor scripts as did presenter Joe

Sebastian Cabot, Barbara Feldon, Dan Blocker and others did not fare as well with the stirring stuff offered on the cue cards.

One memorable moment was the showing of clips from the news highlights of 1968 and a light interlude was provided by slow motion football set to waltz time music.

As a whole, the show stumbled and faltered throughout, particularly in the second hour which could have been deleted completely.
