Freedom, Authority Off Balance?

New York — (RNC) — New adjustments are needed in the delicate balance between academic freedom and teaching authority, the eminent German theologian, Father Karl Rahner, said here.

Speaking in German at New York's Goethe House, the Jesuit scholar hailed the establishment of a new theological commission to aid the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith as a hopeful sign.

Father Rahner, one of the Catholic theologians most often cited by both Catholic and Protestant scholars, is the author of numerous books and articles and the editor of Sacramentum Mundi, a monumental six-volume encyclopedia of theology being published by Herder and Herder.

Surveying the present crisis in Catholic doctrine, the theologian cited two points that often come into conflict: the right of an individual, including the theologian, not to be "forced or coerced into holding certain positions or certain beliefs," and the right of the Church, as "a community which

Stamp Honors Pope's Visit

The 30-centime, orange-vermillion stamp, issued in 1960 for use by the International Labor Organization's bureau in Geneva, is being overprinted, "Visite du Pape Paul VI-Geneve 10 Juin 1969," to commemorate the 50th anniversary of ILO and the Pope's visit to Geneva for that occasion. The stamp depicts a globe from whose orb a ribbon links it with a smoke stack and wheel, symbolizing manufacturing. (RNS)

School Plans Give Rise to Optimism

By WILLIAM RYAN (NC-News-Service)

Bishop Clarence G. Issenmann of Cleveland announced that more than $15 million had been collected in the diocesan high school campaign fund and said all the money will be spent for the expansion of existing school facilities and the building of some new ones, including a $3 million high school in Independence.

In Chicago, meanwhile, Father Robert Clark, superintendent of the archdiocesan system, said fewer retrenchments are expected there this fall than were feared a month ago.

If the Cleveland-Chicago appraisals did not signal a renewal of Catholic school expansion, they at least indicated the determination of Catholic leaders and laity not to let the financially hard-pressed system go down the drain.

Bishop Issenmann said that in addition to the $3 million for Holy Name high school, which will be built on land donated to the diocese, amounts allocated from the campaign fund have included an estimated $3 million each for the new Lorain Catholic High School, to open this fall, and a new high school to open in Lake County in September, 1970.

The good news in Chicago was attributed to the success of efforts by task forces of parish leaders to assure sufficient revenue to maintain the schools in full operation.

Task forces operated this year in 340 of the 429 Catholic elementary schools of the archdiocesan system, one of the largest non-public schools systems in the nation. Nearly 6,000 persons surveyed the financial, academic and personnel needs and resources of the schools.

The Burlington diocesan school board approved subsidies for Catholic high schools in Vermont. The board recommended that each school receive $50 per pupil from diocese funds and that one school, which is facing a serious deficit, be granted an additional $18,000 emergency money.

Burlington has both the largest public and parochial education systems in Vermont. Unless there are some unexpected developments during the summer, it now appears that the four Catholic high schools and 24 elementary schools will open on schedule this fall.

Two elementary schools in downtown Los Angeles closed, but in conjunction with the fall opening of the archdiocese's first "middle school" for seventh and eighth graders.

form of the processes by which the Church evaluates theological developments.

By the beginning of April, 1969, he said, the 30 theologians who originally signed the document had grown to 1,360 from 53 countries. "A very large part, perhaps even the majority of professional theologians in the Catholic world."

The statement expresses the loyalty of the signers to Church teaching and acknowledges the mentality of an earlier age.
