

Soaring Interest in Trailering Boats Prompts Helpful Advice

The trailer has become as important a part of today's pleasure boating rig as the boat or outboard motor itself. The boat trailer provides a mobility and choice of boating waters unheard of just a few years ago. More and more boating facilities are opening to the public across the country, all within reach of the trailerable boat.

Statistics tell the story. Ten years ago, according to Johnson Motors, there were little more than 12-million pleasure boat trailers in use in the United States.

Today, that figure has more than doubled — to 36 million — and is expected to top the four million mark before long.

Still, despite its popularity, many feel trailering a boat is as difficult as guiding a huge semi-trailer truck through a metropolitan city's rush hour traffic snarl.

It isn't of course. All it takes is the right kind of equipment plus a little common sense. Make sure the boat fits the trailer, and that the trailer fits the automobile. A compact car, for example, obviously cannot safely pull a large cruiser.

Experts recommend the tow car be equipped with an automatic transmission. This provides smoother shifting and makes it easier to negotiate with a load at low speeds.

The hitch is important, too. There are many types of trailer hitches on the market today, but most boaters seem to prefer the load-leveling variety, one that distributes the load so the tow car's front wheels and trailer's wheels are sharing the weight.

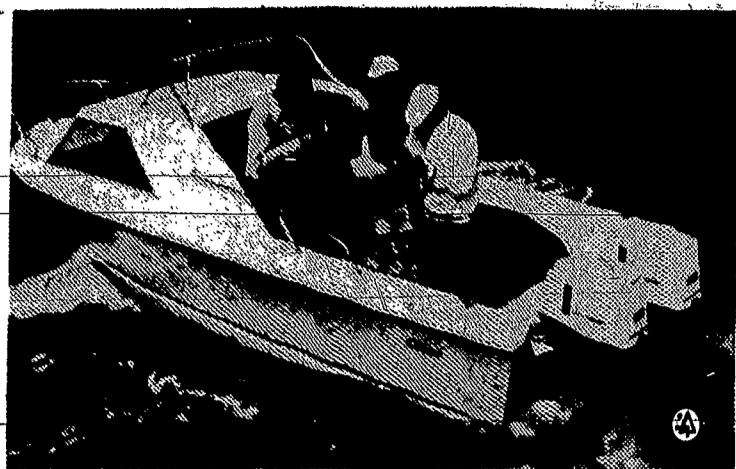

Too much weight on the tow car's rear drive wheels makes it difficult to control the car by reducing traction on the front tires and reduces tire life and causes the car to bottom out on the slightest bump. Ten per cent of the trailer weight on the trailer tongue is a good guideline.

Driving a trailer rig is not difficult, as long as the driver remembers it's back there. Driving with a large boat and trailer hooked on behind is far different than navigating the family jockey down to the corner grocery, so driving sense can make all the difference between a happy outing and a bad memory.

Allow plenty of braking room. With a boat hooked on behind, there are a thousand or two extra pounds that have to be stopped.

Fun for Family

With adequate equipment, proper preparation and planning and a mutual appreciation for the richness of life in the great outdoors, many families find that fishing together is the most enjoyable of all family activities.

The modern outboard offers performance and dependability undreamed of a few short years ago. This booster, for example, equipped with a 55-horsepower engine, and now is ready for big-water fishing or small-lake cruising. Today's outboards offer motors, from 1½-hp. "mini" for a dinghy or canoe to giant 115-hp. powerhouses capable of pushing selected boats at speeds in excess of 50 m.p.h.

Match Vehicle To Camper for Best Results

To get the maximum enjoyment from a camper, special care must be taken in matching the two major elements: the camper coach that houses the eating, sleeping and bathroom facilities — and the vehicle that carries the coach itself. In most cases each must be purchased from separate dealers.

Perhaps the best way to handle the situation is to decide on the type of camper coach you want, and then look for the proper vehicle to carry it.

International Trucks, for example, offers ten camper-carrying models with units available in both rear and all-wheel drive.

Each carries a decal that states its limitations in terms of the combined weight of camper coach, gear and passengers.

Tips to Help Anglers With Outboards

If you're a fisherman, you'll particularly want a smooth idling outboard for trolling. If your engine is not as smooth as it should be, here are some conditions that may cause the roughness:

- Improperly mixed, or stale fuel
- Carburetor setting too rich or too lean
- Pinched or kinked fuel line
- Fouled or improperly gapped spark plugs
- Defective fuel pump
- Carburetor or magneto out of sync

These are some of the more common causes of rough idling.
