

Baltimore See Gets Loan for Housing Project

Baltimore — (NC) — The federal government has approved a $3.5 million loan for a Baltimore archdiocese-sponsored apartment house for the aged, according to Francis X. Gallagher, archdiocesan attorney.

The announcement climaxed a one-and-a-half year wait for government financing of the project, which has been under consideration since 1964.

The FHA insured loan is under section 236 of the National Housing Act administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The total cost is $3,542,000, all of which is government financed.

The 15-story apartment building, located one block from the Basilica of the Assumption, has been named Basilica Towers.

Of the 240 units in the building, 168 will be efficiency apartments and 72 will be one-bedroom apartments. Exact age and income requirements of tenants have not been determined.

Who Is Leonard ?

Many Rochesterians have recently received a brochure from Aquinas Institute showing a high school student with the caption "Leonard Needs a Big Daddy. Won't you answer his call?" Its purpose is to acquaint people with the Aquinas Principal's Scholarship Fund.

Many have asked just who Leonard is. He has never been seen at the school. His real name is Steve and he is a graphic arts student at McKinley Vocational High School in Buffalo. He expects to come to R.I.T. to study commercial photography and volunteered to act as model for the brochure in Rochester to see how photographer John Hart does his thing.

The brochure describes the impoverished conditions under which "Leonard" lives and says that Aquinas tries not to deny a boy a Catholic education for financial reasons. The unsubsidized cost of needy students borne by Aquinas and the Basilian Fathers is nearly $30,000 a year. The Principal's Scholarship Fund appeals for aid so that needy boys can get a Catholic education.
