Bishop Hogan Not the First Prelate from Lima

By FATHER ROBERT McNAMARA, St. Bernard's Seminary

The village of Lima is properly proud that one of its natives and former citizens, Joseph Lloyd Hogan, has become seventh Bishop of Rochester.

I wonder how many Limans realize that another one of their former fellowcitizens, James Edward Quigley, became a bishop—indeed, an archbishop—in the Catholic Church. For a small village, this is quite a record!

James Quigley was not a native of Lima. When he was born (October 15, 1855), his parents James and Mary Quigley lived in Oshawa, Ontario. But they moved to Lima when he was a youngster—apparently in 1860—and continued to live there until 1870. His father was a carpenter and "joiner."

James attended the local schoolhouse until he was nearly 15. From there he went to Buffalo, where he enrolled in St. Joseph's College, graduating in 1872. The 12-year-old James and his family came in from Lima to Rochester's St. Patrick's Church on July 16, 1868, to witness the installation of the first Bishop of Rochester—Bernard J. McQuaid.

In later years the Archbishop often recounted his recollection of Bishop McQuaid's first Rochester sermon. "I come here," McQuaid had said, with firm voice, "without fear, knowing what is to be done. If God gives me health and strength and length of life, I shall do it."

James Quigley himself soon became attracted to the priesthood, even turning down an appointment to Annapolis to follow the call. Curiously enough, he did not sign up for the Diocese of Rochester, but for the Diocese of Buffalo.

He received his priestly training at Our Lady of Angels Seminary, Niagara Falls; at the University of Innsbruck, Austria, and at the Urban College, Rome. It was at Rome that he was ordained a priest on April 13, 1879, by Cardinal Raffaelle Monaco la Valletta.

His family had meanwhile moved from Lima to Rochester in 1870. The family home at 116 Campbell Street, Rochester, was therefore his official address until he took up his priestly work in Buffalo.

Father Quigley soon made his mark in Buffalo. He showed a special interest in the laboring man and the immigrant, and was for several years rector of the Buffalo cathedral. On November 30, 1896, he was named third Bishop of Buffalo. Assisting Archbishop Michael A. Corrigan, who consecrated him on February 24, 1897, was Bishop Mc-Quaid of Rochester.

During 6 years there, Bishop Quigley played a major part in settling a Buffalo dock strike. He also took a firm stand against Socialist infiltration among the local workers.

It was probably because of his prolabor and pro-immigrant disposition that he was transferred to the post of Archbishop of Chicago on June 12, 1903.

While at Chicago (1903-1915) he saw to the appointment, as his auxiliary bishop, of the first Polish-American member of the American hierarchy, Peter Paul Rhode. It was Archbishop Quigley, also, who founded the Catholic Church Extension Society, to support the American home missions.

Archbishop Quigley often returned to Rochester to renew his many friendships, and to visit with his brother Joseph, long the head of the Rochester Police Department.

Did he also go down to Lima, his boyhood village, on these occasions? Surely the old-timers of Lima can give us some precise information. Until they have, we must simply answer:

How could he have stayed away?
