Those Good Old Films...Really That Good?

Television has, among other things. been able to demonstrate how the tastes of an individual can change through the years.

I'm thinking now primarily of the films which we may have seen in the movie houses 10, 20, perhaps even 30 years ago.

We remember them with great joy, as being gems of wit, sophistication and entertainment and wish hopefully for the showing of them on tele-

And, then suddenly, magically, somewhere in the lineup covered by Sunday through Saturday Night at the movies, the late night show, the Memorable Movies, there they are:

A couple of weeks ago I saw a movie in color which I had been waiting for another look at since it first came out in 1954.

"Seven Brides for Seven Brothers"

I remembered as a one-of-a-kind musical, lilting and lovely, good story line and lots of fun. Trouble was once I discovered it was going to be on I never stopped talking about it. By the time it appeared on the tube, anything had to be a letdown.

Jane Powell, Howard Keel, Russ Tamblyn were among the stars in this domesticated version of the Sabine women story. Only one song had lived on. The color was not particularly good. The scenery was quite clearly false in many instances and the plot left something to be desired in its too leisurely progress.

There was one element that made the whole show worth while. The dancing was as superb as I had remembered, perhaps even better.

But the rest of the ingredients were unsatisfying, in part because my tastes have changed and hopefully have become refined through experience, also in part because modern movie making techniques have turned us all into such sophisticates.

If you didn't get a chance to see the Channel 21 program "Can Rochester Integrate its Schools?" the first time around when it was screened this past week, it will be rerun tonight (Friday) from 10:30 to 11:30

Participants include Herman Goldberg, superintendent of schools; Dorothy Phillips, school commissioner, and members of the Advisory Planning Council on Quality Integrated Education. The group came into existence following the school boycott that took place in the inner city last fall. Times Union reporter Ken Hooper also takes part.

Background of Rochester's attempts at full integration is included in the

'Easy Rider'

Both a song recorded by The Byrds and a film starring Peter Fonda, 'Easy Rider" is about people wanting to be free, and both the song and movie have stirred up many people today who are pro-freedom.

Of course, being in favor of freedom is not always the same as knowing what freedom is. Another songwriter writes: "Freedom is a word I seldom use without thinking." We wonder: can those who easily associate with

The question isnt meant to condemn the many Easy Riders who are searching for some clue to life's puzzle. "Easy Rider" is a story about a couple (a couple million?) of guys who roam the country on motorcycles. They're look-ing for something, but they have no special direction or

"The river flows; it flows to the sea. Wherever that river goes, that's where I want to be." Here we're not taiking about alienation so much as we're talking about wanderlust, a need to go, go, go: anywhere, as long as it's new; to see if somewhere else the grass is really higher; to find a handle to life through modern-day panhansome

"Flow, river, flow. Let your waters wash down. Take me from this road to some other town." In the song and movie, as well as in life, when wanderlust seizes you by the scruff of the neck, searching becomes a matter of life or death. Death wins out in "Easy Rider," but even death brings a kind of freedom:

To Be Free

"All they wanted was to be free. That's the way it turned out to be."

The wanderers in the movie never found any answers in life. If you're an Easy Rider, maybe it's impossible to discover any answers in life. Maybe the people who worked on the song and the movie wanted to say that jumping on a motorcycle and rolling to "some other town" qualifies you to be an Easy Rider mainly because it's the easy

We wouldn't presume to answer that question for anyone except ourselves, but it's one that must be

Is it true that "all they wanted was to be free"? Or do Easy Riders merely ask the river to let its "waters the great dome. wash down" over their inability to face problems right in front of them?

(NC News Service)

To celebrate is to remember who we are and to say "yes" with ceremony.

Fourth of July picnics and Thanksgiving dinners are celebrations of freedom, democracy, and whatever else it means to be American.

The Christian community comes together at Mass to celebrate its past and to look to its future as God's People.

"On the night before He suffered" Christ gave His Church a sign — a sacrament — of His death on Calvary and of His Father's acceptance of that sacrifice The Last Supper of Jesus was the sign - the sacrament - the People of God were to imitate "in memory of Him." They were to celebrate in the way Jesus taught them by a "eucharistic" proclamation over food and drink When they remembered in this way, Christ would become present in a very secial and unique manner. This is the mystery of faith, of which St. Paul speaks, "the mystery of Christ among you, your hope of glory." (Col. 1:27)

The Eucharistic Prayer over food and drink recalls

MEMO TO: Father Austin, Padua Prep School

The final decision of your Provincial not to open Padua to the black community as a prep school came as a great disappointment. We had hoped that your initial proposal to the FIGHT organization would some day become reality. It offered so much promise for the Church and specificially the Franciscans to relate to and work for the black community in a most unique and challenging manner. We have once again offered the hand of hope r to snatch it away at the last moment. How unfortunate for a people who have suffered so much-how obvious is our failure.
